Printed “glass” (English; lemma).

A mirror in a metaphor of distorted representation.

Here: Glass supplies mirror, false supplies distorting. Superstition is represented as a deceptive imitation of religion, beside ape, bastard and shadow.

Context: Burton’s sweeping religious polemic, not an endorsed accusation about the peoples he lists.

Source wording and original alignment: false glass

Modern rendering: distorting mirror glass-man

BAL-0225-V026 · Glass

Printed “Glass-mans” (English; lemma).

Glass-man: a worker or dealer in glass; the printed form is possessive.

Here: Glass-mans qualifies wife through her husband’s occupation. The modern selects glassworker, while the historical compound can also cover a dealer.

Context: Burton cites an uncollated Platter case in which the husband said he would marry again if she died. The conditional remarriage statement and Burton’s gendered susceptibility claim remain his report.

Source wording and original alignment: A Glass-mans wife

Modern rendering: A glassworker’s wife

BAL-0225-V025 · Glass

Printed “glased” (English; lemma).

Glazed: fitted with glass, particularly in windows.

Here: Glased supplies glazed; stately and Palaces remain stately and palaces. This derived participial form concerns a building fitted with glass, not a single reflective object.

Context: Burton gives Venice as an exception to his regional paper-window account. The description must not be extended to all buildings in the countries named.

Source wording and original alignment: stately glased Palaces

Modern rendering: stately glazed palaces

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

glew or lime

BAL-0211-V011 · Bawd

Printed “glew or lime” (English; phrase).

Sticky glue or birdlime used figuratively for entrapment.

Here: The mind’s wings become unable to escape once caught by the procurers’ attractions.

Context: Continuation of Burton’s infernal trapping imagery, not a description of literal glue applied to a mind.

Source wording and original alignment: the glew or lime

Modern rendering: the glue or birdlime

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The indexed form contributes sticky glue or birdlime used figuratively for entrapment.

Gnatho

BAL-0281-V008 · Parasite

Printed “Gnathoes” (English; lemma).

Gnathos: flatterers named after the parasite Gnatho in Terence’s Eunuch.

Here: People display counterfeit virtue and affection to steal favour.

Context: Burton contrasts false appearances with genuine honourable love; the continuation says such dependants generally attach to great men and may gain offices, ruining themselves and others.

Source wording and original alignment: their flattering Gnathoes

Modern rendering: their flattering Gnathos

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The pluralized character name is retained and regularized. Flattering states the conduct; the proper-name allusion supplies the social type.

Printed “Gnathoe’s” (English; lemma).

Citation key: Gnatho.

Gnathos, meaning flattering dependants; plural despite the printed apostrophe.

Here: Undeserving dependants are promoted while worthy people are neglected.

Context: Burton reports writers who explain this through attending spirits; he previously questions authority for angelic jurisdictions. It is a historical theory, not an established cause of patronage.

Source wording and original alignment: undeserving Gnathoe’s, and vicious parasites

Modern rendering: undeserving Gnathos and vicious parasites

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Gnathoe’s becomes Gnathos, with the original plural sense; parasites remains a separate coordinated noun.

go to law

BAL-0294-V029 · Law and justice

Printed “Go not to law without great cause” (English; phrase).

Resort to legal proceedings: go to law means litigate, while not without great cause limits permission to a serious reason.

Here: A practical warning against unnecessary litigation.

Context: The qualification leaves room for a sufficiently serious cause; it is not an absolute prohibition.

Source wording and original alignment: Go not to law without great cause.

BAL-0200-V019 · Love

Printed “golden chain” (English; phrase).

A figurative bond connecting every creature with its Creator.

Here: After creation, redemption and providence, the chain makes creatures dependent upon God’s originating love and goodness, not upon their own beauty or merit.

Context: Burton invokes Homer’s image within his Christian account; God is the source of love and creatures its recipients.

Source wording and original alignment: Homers golden chain, which reacheth down from Heaven to Earth, by which every creature is annexed, and depends on his Creator

Modern rendering: Homer’s golden chain, reaching down from heaven to earth, by which every creature is linked to and depends upon its Creator

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Golden chain supplies the bond; the relative clauses explicitly state downward reach, attachment and dependence.

Qualification: The Homeric allusion is interpreted by Burton; the edition does not establish the immediate allegorical intermediary.

golden chain of inspired love

BAL-0200-V018 · Love

Printed “golden chain” (English; phrase).

A figurative bond descending from heaven and drawing the soul towards incorruptible beauty.

Here: The heavenly chain contrasts with sea-born, unstable lust and inspires divine rapture in souls made in God’s image.

Context: Burton attributes this division to Lucian; the wording mixes a classical image with Christian creation language.

Source wording and original alignment: that golden chain which was let down from heaven

Modern rendering: that golden chain let down from heaven

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Golden chain is the metaphorical bond; let down from heaven gives its direction and origin.

Uncertainty: The supplied edition leaves the exact Lucian passage and intermediary unresolved; the attribution is Burton’s.

BAL-0274-V006 · Estate

Printed “good estate” (English; family).

A sound or favourable condition.

Here: Sorrow is said to undermine bodily well-being and its operations.

Context: Burton’s historical physiology of the passions, in which heart contraction and bodily effects accompany sorrow.

Source wording and original alignment: subverts the good estate of the Body

Modern rendering: undermines the body’s well-being

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Subverts supplies undermines; good estate supplies well-being; of the Body becomes the possessive body’s.

Context passages: DJR-025-27, DJR-025-29

Further local use

Printed “good estate” (English; family).

Citation key: Good estate; welfare.

Well-being or welfare.

Here: Care for welfare and health requires body and mind to share moderate exertion.

Context: Burton’s ox-and-camel fable, from Plutarch, warns that bodily exhaustion interrupts study as well as health.

BAL-0239-V001 · Gossip

Printed “Gossips” (English; lemma).

Familiar companions or associates, often women in social company.

Here: Gossips identifies the companions among whom factions arise. Their rivalry is described separately; the noun does not itself mean habitual spreaders of rumours.

Context: Burton extends rivalry across social ranks and into small groups; the following discussion expressly allows honorable emulation and condemns excess rather than every wish to excel.

Printed “Gossips” (English; lemma).

Familiar female companions or friends.

Here: The possessive phrase identifies a woman’s friend. Quarrelling and public disclosure of an undisclosed infirmity are acts performed by that friend, not the lexical definition of Gossips.

Context: Burton reports Ronsse’s case of a twenty-five-year-old woman becoming withdrawn and wasting after public reproach; the source remains uncollated and the infirmity unnamed.

Source wording and original alignment: one of her Gossips

BAL-0239-V003 · Gossip

Printed “gossipping” (English; lemma).

Social visiting, gathering or conversing with familiar company.

Here: The verbal noun can include social meetings and visits, not only malicious talk. Meaner sort identifies lower social rank; the modern supplies the definite article and recasts among as of.

Context: Burton mentions rather than develops these occupations after women’s household activities. His ensuing praise of prayer beads for occupation is immediately checked by his Protestant objection; the continuation calls for moderation of body and mind.

Source wording and original alignment: gossipping among the meaner sort

Modern rendering: the gossiping of the lower ranks

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Gossipping becomes the gossiping; among the meaner sort becomes of the lower ranks, a construction-level recasting with a supplied article.

Printed “Gossip” (English; lemma).

A familiar female visitor or companion, here acting as a teller of tales.

Here: Prating supplies chattering. The context describes the visitor telling stories and praising possible lovers, and the margin feeding rumours: talk and possible sexual mediation are explicit local activities, not inferred from every occurrence of gossip.

Context: Burton attributes the observation to Augustine, but the identified source is Aelred’s rule for a recluse transmitted among Augustinian works. Burton generalizes an enclosed recluse into a young woman in a nunnery; these are attributed moral warnings, not verified accusations against nuns.

Source wording and original alignment: some prating Gossip

Modern rendering: some chattering gossip

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Some remains some, prating becomes chattering and Gossip remains gossip; the local gloss explains the retained noun.

graft horns

BAL-0243-V004 · Wittal and cuckold

Printed “graft hornes” (English; phrase).

To make a husband a cuckold, expressed through the image of attaching horns.

Here: Graft is a horticultural verb transferred to cuckoldry; hornes is the older spelling of horns. The modern supplies you from the addressed husband and cuckold’s to explain the conventional image.

Context: The wife perhaps does this during absence: perhaps must survive. This belongs to an announced counter-parody of pro-marriage arguments, followed by Burton’s acceptance of marriage despite risk.

Source; Context passages: DJR-143-31

Source wording and original alignment: graft hornes

Modern rendering: give you cuckold’s horns

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The metaphor is glossed, not translated component for component: graft becomes give, you is supplied from the address, and cuckold’s explains the horns.

Alignment qualification: Perhaps lies outside the selected phrase but governs the claim; no actual affair is established.

Printed “Heroicall love causing Melancholy” (English; phrase).

Erotic love considered as a cause of melancholy.

Context: This is Burton’s section heading, not a modern diagnostic label.

Source wording and original alignment: Heroicall love causing Melancholy

Modern rendering: Love melancholy

Alignment scope: Whole heading-subject alignment; the modern compound is more compressed than the original causal construction.

Word and construction: The modern title compresses the source’s causal phrase into the conventional subject-name; it does not render heroical as a separate word.

Translation layer: Heading-level compression: causing is implicit in the compound title, not separately translated.

heroical melancholy

BAL-0201-V003 · Heroical love

Printed “Heroical” (English; family).

Heroic or noble: the adjective used in the historical name of erotic melancholy.

Here: The branch on love of women divides into heroic melancholy before marriage and jealousy after it.

Context: Burton’s synopsis organizes the work; the later prose uses commonly and usually for the temporal division.

Modern rendering: Before marriage, as heroic melancholy

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Heroical contributes heroic; the abbreviation Mel. supplies melancholy. The full phrase is aligned rather than assigning both words to the adjective alone.

Hilaritatis dulce seminarium

BAL-0220-V021 · Seed

Printed “hilaritatis dulce seminarium” (Latin; phrase).

Hilaritatis means of cheerfulness; dulce sweet; seminarium a seedbed or nursery.

Here: Wine is pictured as a pleasant source from which cheerfulness grows, a positive use of the growth image.

Context: Burton’s praise is followed by an interpretation attributed to Oribasius and others that Helen’s nepenthe was simply wine; the edition distinguishes that interpretation from Homer’s drug mixed into wine.

Source wording and original alignment: hilaritatis dulce seminarium

Modern rendering: a sweet seedbed of cheerfulness hold one’s peace

BAL-0296-V020 · War and peace

Printed “hold their peace” (English; phrase).

Remain silent; hold is maintain, and peace in this idiom means silence.

Here: Lawyers allegedly paid more for silence than others earn by speaking well.

Context: This belongs to the accusation against corrupt pettifoggers, with worthy lawyers explicitly excepted earlier.

Source wording and original alignment: get more to hold their peace, then we can to say our best

Modern rendering: receive more for keeping quiet than we can for saying our best

Word and construction: Hold their peace supplies keeping quiet; the comparison of payments and the two groups remains.

homely

BAL-0226-V001 · Homely

Printed “homely” (English; lemma).

Plain, unpolished or commonplace.

Here: Homely characterizes literary manner in the hostile description of Seneca. Shallow is a separate judgment of intellectual depth.

Context: Burton assembles criticism of Seneca to show that even an admired writer cannot satisfy everyone.

BAL-0205-V006 · Dancing

Printed “honest disport” (English; phrase).

Morally permissible amusement or pastime.

Here: Burton explicitly rejects the charge that he condemns dancing absolutely and permits it when timely, moderate and sober.

Context: Burton’s reply to the imagined reader’s objection at the preceding unit.

Source; Context passages: DJR-124-47

horn mad

BAL-0243-V006 · Wittal and cuckold

Printed “horn mad” (English; phrase).

Extremely mad, with a pun here on the horns of knowingly tolerated cuckoldry.

Here: Horn mad combines an intensifying expression with the ensuing explanation that husbands let others sleep with their wives and knowingly overlook it.

Context: This is Burton’s broad satirical use of madness for folly and vice, not a clinical classification. The cited Proverbs/Martial references remain unreconciled.

Source wording and original alignment: horn mad some of them

Modern rendering: Some are mad enough to wear cuckolds’ horns

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The short original predicate is expanded into a finite explanatory clause; are and enough to wear cuckolds’ horns make the pun explicit rather than reproducing a literal component translation.

Hortus

BAL-0217-V004 · Green sickness

Printed “horto meo” (Latin; lemma).

Horto is the ablative of hortus, garden; meo means my.

Here: Pratensis’s first-person garden supplies the comparison for wasting from inadequate nourishment.

Context: The phrase is in Burton’s marginal quotation of Pratensis; it is not independently Burton’s autobiographical assertion.

Modern rendering: herbs in my garden do this May for lack of rain

Alignment scope: Corresponding garden-simile portions across the original marginal quotation and paired modern body; the modern paraphrase does not translate every Latin word separately

Word and construction: The indexed horto meo contributes in my garden within the larger simile.

Alignment qualification: This aligns the garden portion of Burton’s Latin note with the corresponding English paraphrase in the paired modern body. The printed zeriscæ is unusual; the edition interprets it contextually rather than claiming independent collation.

Humanitas; human condition

BAL-0277-V010 · Humane learning

Printed “humanitatem” (Latin; family).

Humanity or the human condition; accusative singular of humanitas, object of transcendere.

Here: Calisto feels as though erotic delight carries him beyond mortal humanity.

Context: Burton quotes Calisto in Celestina and frames the speech as overconfidence, following the conditional possibility of an encouraging look, kiss or message. First-person seeming belongs to the quoted character, not an assertion of actual transcendence. The ensuing examples turn from elation to distress at DJR-127-73. importunely

BAL-0231-V021 · Occasion and opportunity

Printed “importunely” (English; lemma).

At an unsuitable or inconvenient time.

Here: Importunely supplies at an unsuitable time, distinct from unadvisedly without judgement and immoderately to excess. It does not mean persistent solicitation here.

Context: Burton’s bloodletting argument contrasts neglect when he thinks it indicated with harmful misuse; the neighboring bath discussion also varies judgment by presumed humoral constitution. These historical treatments are not present-day instructions.

Source wording and original alignment: unadvisedly, importunely, immoderately used

Modern rendering: used without judgement, at an unsuitable time or to excess

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The three adverbs are rendered as three distinct phrases, with the participle moved to the start; or makes the alternatives explicit.

importunity

Printed “Importunity” (English; lemma).

Persistent urging or solicitation.

Here: Importunity supplies persistence, distinct from opportunity, the favourable circumstances of time and place. Their similar sound does not make them synonyms.

Context: The subsection heading joins persistent pursuit with the conditions and devices of courtship. This describes Burton’s subject, not a recommendation to override another person’s wishes.

importunus

BAL-0231-V023 · Occasion and opportunity

Printed “importunus” (Latin; lemma).

Troublesome or unseasonable; Latin masculine singular adjective.

Here: Importunus modifies sudor, sweating. The modern first renders the Latin troublesome sweating, then retains Burton’s separate English unseasonable sweat; the two formulations are not silently merged.

Context: The phrase belongs to an attributed historical symptom catalogue. The preceding paragraph explicitly denies that fear and sorrow are universal symptoms; this is not a modern definition of hypochondria.

Source wording and original alignment: importunus sudor

Modern rendering: troublesome sweating

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

impotency

BAL-0210-V005 · Impotent

Printed “Impotency” (English; lemma).

Inability to fulfil sexual duties within marriage.

Here: A husband’s awareness of incapacity becomes a proposed cause of jealous suspicion.

Context: Burton develops a historical and gendered account of suspicion; it does not establish that the wife is unfaithful.

Source wording and original alignment: Impotency first, when a man is not able of himself to perform those dues which he ought unto his wife

Modern rendering: First, impotence: when a man cannot perform the duties he owes his wife

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Impotency names sexual incapacity; the following when-clause supplies Burton’s marital explanation.

Printed “in her smock” (English; phrase).

With no dowry or possessions beyond her shift or basic clothing.

Here: Smock means shift; the phrase imagines marrying a woman without property beyond her clothing. Good huswife describes skill in household management, not marriage status before the match.

Context: The hypothetical preference occurs in an anti-marriage argument about the burdens of wealthy wives, later countered by praise of good wives.

Source wording and original alignment: thou hadst better have taken a good huswife maid in her smock

Modern rendering: you would have done better to take a maiden who was a good housekeeper, with nothing but her shift

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The complete comparative recommendation is aligned; in her smock becomes the explanatory with nothing but her shift, and good huswife maid is expanded into a maiden who was a good housekeeper.

in someone’s gift

BAL-0230-V004 · Gifts and liberality

Printed “gift” (English; phrase).

The authority or right to bestow an appointment.

Here: The idiom in someone’s gift identifies the person entitled to appoint, here the bishop. It does not mean that the chaplain already owns the post.

Context: The imaginary Moronia tale lists rival claimants and awards the post freely to an unconnected scholar; DJR-096-24 explicitly withdraws the ending as pure fiction, never true or likely. This is not an authenticated appointment.

incontinency

BAL-0236-V025 · Adultery

Printed “incontinency” (English; lemma).

Lack of sexual restraint; sexual misconduct.

Here: The noun states the charge. The narrative says he did not yield, parallels Bellerophon’s false accusation, and subsequently clears him.

Context: The Combabus story is literary, transmitted under Lucian’s name; its alleged misconduct must not be converted into an established offence or its self-injury offered as a remedy.

Source wording and original alignment: was accused to Seleucus of incontinency, (as that Bellerophon was in like case, falsely traduced by Sthenobia, to King Prætus her husband, cum non posset ad coitum inducere) and that by her

Modern rendering: she herself accused him to Seleucus of sexual misconduct—just as Bellerophon, in a similar case, was falsely denounced by Sthenoboea to her husband King Proetus “when she could not induce him to have intercourse.”

Alignment scope: Complete accusation and comparison recast from passive to active, with reordered agent

Word and construction: The original and that by her becomes the modern subject she herself; him is supplied from the continuing subject of the original passive. The Bellerophon comparison and its quoted Latin circumstantial clause are inside both selected spans.

indifferent

BAL-0253-V001 · Indifferent

Printed “indifferent” (English; lemma).

Middling; occupying a middle rank.

Here: The speaker’s party awards itself wisdom, puts some outsiders in a middle class and dismisses the rest as fools.

Context: Burton satirizes competing claims to superiority and turns the judgment back on the person who laughs at others.

Source wording and original alignment: others indifferent

Modern rendering: others are middling

Word and construction: Indifferent becomes middling; are supplies the elliptical verb. The classification concerns rank, not lack of interest.

Judging beauty

BAL-0202-V014 · Beauty

Printed “Amantes de forma judicare non possunt” (Latin; phrase).

Lovers cannot judge beauty: amantes is the subject; de forma specifies the matter judged; non possunt denies ability.

Here: After separation, the lover supposedly recognizes a prior distortion of judgment; the maxim serves a cure argument.

Context: Attributed to Fabius and endorsed in Burton’s interpretation of a Petrarch anecdote, not a neutral psychological law.

Source; Context passages: DJR-135-44

Kissing and mortal sin

BAL-0204-V013 · Kissing and embracing

Printed “contactus & osculum sit mortale peccatum” (Latin; phrase).

Touching and kissing are a mortal sin, as the proposition is compressed here: contactus means touch, osculum kiss, mortale peccatum mortal sin.

Here: Burton invokes severe theological propositions conditionally to intensify a question about immodest acts, then returns to his stated purpose of tracing lust.

Context: A conditional appeal attributed to Thomas, alongside Ledesma, Jerome and Durandus; not an adequately qualified statement of Aquinas’s teaching.

Source wording and original alignment: contactus & osculum sit mortale peccatum

Modern rendering: touching and kissing are a mortal sin

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modern wording renders the compressed proposition; the surrounding if supplies its argumentative condition.

Qualification: The supplied note states that Aquinas II–II 154.4 denies that kisses and touches are mortal sins in themselves and distinguishes intention. The Ledesma and Durandus claims remain unverified; Jerome quotes the over-ardent-husband saying from Xystus.

BAL-0200-V022 · Love

Printed “Deo cognoscendo an amando” (Latin; phrase).

In knowing God or in loving him: alternative proposed completions of human happiness.

Here: The marginal note asks which activity fulfils happiness; the body combines seeing, desire and loving in full fruition rather than separately settling the alternatives.

Context: The marginal question is attributed to Leone Ebreo; its opening Dubitatur says it is disputed, not decided.

Note; Modern note: N12018

Source wording and original alignment: Dubitatur an humana felicitas Deo cognoscendo an amando terminetur

Modern rendering: it is disputed whether human happiness finds its fulfilment in knowing God or in loving him

Alignment scope: Equal-scope complete marginal question and its supplied English translation.

Word and construction: Cognoscendo names knowing; amando names loving; Deo supplies God as the object shared by both alternatives.

Modern container: note

Grammar: Indirect question with two alternatives in an ablative gerundive construction: cognoscendo and amando agree with Deo, literally God as known or loved, idiomatically knowing or loving God; the second alternative shares Deo.

liberty

BAL-0241-V009 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “liberty” (English; lemma).

Freedom from another’s restraint or command.

Here: Liberty concerns movement and control of one’s life; its loss may distress even someone supplied with comfortable housing and food. Servitude and imprisonment name related but not identical conditions.

Context: Burton adds these causes to his historical account of melancholy, expressly saying to some persons. The continuation distinguishes comfortable restriction from slavery and an actual prison.

BAL-0241-V022 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “liberty” (English; lemma).

Licence or latitude to act without restraint.

Here: Liberty glosses the freedom afforded by greatness. The following impunity of sin adds immunity from punishment, claimed by the powerful rather than established as a right.

Context: The conditional combination of youth, rank and claimed impunity explains Burton’s accusation of increased vice; it does not prove every great person corrupt.

Source; Context passages: DJR-116-29

BAL-0241-V029 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “liberty” (English; lemma).

Permission for movement and social activity.

Here: Liberty is the freedom husbands are urged to allow wives; with discretion supplies reasonable and the time-and-place qualification limits it.

Context: Burton’s advice balances criticism of confinement with warnings against too much latitude. Its demand for wives’ obedience and silence remains patriarchal rather than an unqualified equal-rights argument.

BAL-0241-V034 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “liberty” (English; lemma).

Spiritual deliverance or the source of it.

Here: Liberty is predicated of Christ as the believer’s deliverance from sin, death and the devil. The modern explicitly names Christ to disambiguate he.

Context: Burton exhorts a troubled believer to reject Satan’s accusation of rejection; the next he who accuses refers to Satan, not Christ. This is Christian consolation, not a general political liberty.

liberty of the prison

BAL-0241-V030 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “liberty of the prison” (English; phrase).

Limited freedom within imprisonment.

Here: The jailer releases the prisoner from restraints and permits movement within the prison; he does not discharge him from captivity.

Context: The Aristaenetus attribution concerns a story found in a later translation rather than established in the Greek text. The alleged cuckolding supplies an ingratitude example, not proof that humane treatment causes sexual betrayal.

Source wording and original alignment: he let him loose, to enjoy the liberty of the prison

Modern rendering: he released him from his restraints and allowed him the freedom of the prison

Alignment scope: Complete finite clause with purpose infinitive recast as coordinated finite predicates

Word and construction: Liberty of the prison supplies freedom of the prison; the modern released him from his restraints explicates let him loose, and allowed him recasts the purpose infinitive to enjoy as a coordinated finite predicate. The whole construction preserves restricted movement within captivity.

Liberty; freedom in writing

BAL-0282-V009 · Parrhesia

Printed “liberty” (English; family).

Licence or freedom to discuss a subject openly.

Here: Burton extends the freedom of his earlier discussion to love and lust.

Context: He claims to censure lust, deter others and teach remedies, rather than teach erotic practice. This is his defence of the writing’s purpose, following anticipated accusations of frivolity and wantonness; the original margin preserves the explicit teaching of remedies.

Source; Context passages: DJR-108-16

looking-glass

BAL-0225-V021 · Glass

Printed “looking-glass” (English; lemma).

A mirror, metaphorically a person reflecting another’s feelings.

Here: The wife is asked to adapt her expression and feeling to her husband’s. The literal optical object supplies an analogy for unequal emotional duties.

Context: Burton attributes the prescription to Plutarch and frames it as mutual love; this does not remove the asymmetry of who must mirror whom.

Source wording and original alignment: as a looking-glass

love

BAL-0200-V001 · Love

Printed “Love” (English; lemma).

Affection directed towards something taken as good; its relation to desire is disputed in Burton’s reported definitions.

Here: The opening definition treats desire as the wider term, then distinguishes wishing for an absent good from enjoying a present one.

Context: Burton reports differing formulations in Leone Ebreo’s dialogues rather than establishing one invariant definition.

Source wording and original alignment: Desire wisheth, Love enjoyes

Modern rendering: Desire wishes; love enjoys

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Love supplies the enjoying member of the contrast; desire supplies the wishing member.

BAL-0200-V003 · Love

Printed “seems to be good” (English; phrase).

Appears desirable or beneficial to the one who desires it.

Here: Burton’s qualification allows a mistaken appearance of goodness to explain attraction.

Context: Burton adds apparent good to the ethical maxim that all things seek good; he does not declare every desired act morally good.

Source wording and original alignment: or at least that which to them seems to be good

Modern rendering: or at least what seems good to them love as union

BAL-0200-V002 · Love

Printed “Love is an affection” (English; phrase).

An affection that establishes or maintains union with its object.

Here: Scaliger’s alternative is intended to explain why love can remain after appetite has been satisfied.

Context: Burton reports Scaliger’s objection to the preceding definitions, with partial agreement attributed to Leone Ebreo.

Source wording and original alignment: Love is an affection by which we are either united to the thing we love, or perpetuate our union

Modern rendering: an affection by which we are either united with what we love or maintain our union with it

Alignment scope: Definition-level alignment: the modern quoted predicate omits the repeated subject and copula, which its reporting frame supplies.

Word and construction: The original’s introductory Love is is implicit in the modern reporting construction; the modern quoted predicate states the same definition.

Qualification: The body names Augustine for the preceding account of delight, while its margin names Godefridus. This record follows Burton’s report of Scaliger, not a collation of Scaliger’s own work.

love of angels

BAL-0200-V021 · Love

Printed “The love of Angels and living souls” (English; phrase).

Mutual affection among angels and living souls, extending to believers still on earth.

Here: Prayer and solicitude for human welfare exemplify the protective direction of this love.

Context: Burton describes celestial beings as active well-wishers and ministers of salvation; the claim belongs to his reported Christian cosmology.

Source wording and original alignment: The love of Angels and living souls, is mutuall amongst themselves

Modern rendering: Angels and living souls love one another

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modern sentence changes the nominal construction to a verb while preserving the reciprocal agents.

love presupposes knowledge

BAL-0200-V017 · Love

Printed “love presupposeth knowledge, faith, hope” (English; phrase).

Love assumes knowledge, faith and hope and, in this account, unites the lover to God.

Here: The sentence links love of God to keeping the commandments and to accompanying virtues.

Context: Burton combines Johannine quotations with a claim attributed to Leone Ebreo; the next unit spells out duties to neighbours.

Source wording and original alignment: love presupposeth knowledge, faith, hope

Modern rendering: love presupposes knowledge, faith and hope

BAL-0201-V015 · Heroical love

Printed “Symptomes of the mind in Lovers” (English; phrase).

Mental signs and experiences attributed to lovers.

Here: The range is almost infinite: occasional joy coexists with a predominance of distress in Burton’s account.

Context: Burton retains sometimes and most part, rather than making misery every lover’s unvarying state.

Source wording and original alignment: the Symptomes of the mind in Lovers, are almost infinite

Modern rendering: lovers’ mental symptoms are almost endless

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Symptoms denotes the attributed mental manifestations; almost qualifies the claim of endless variety.

BAL-0201-V014 · Heroical love

Printed “pulsus amatorius” (Latin; phrase).

A lover’s pulse, a supposed pulse characteristic of erotic attachment.

Here: Vallés denies such a diagnostic pulse, while Avicenna and Gordon confirm reports of irregular rapid pulse when the beloved passes.

Context: The passage expressly disputes the inference, setting named deniers against named supporters and case reports.

Source wording and original alignment: pulsus amatorius

Modern rendering: lover’s pulse

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Pulsus is pulse; amatorius describes its supposed relation to a lover. The quoted noun phrase is the object of Vallés’s denial.

Qualification: The case stories and pulse claims are historical reports, not evidence that a person’s attachment can reliably be diagnosed by pulse.

love’s good and harmful changes

BAL-0201-V016 · Heroical love

Printed “whether love do mortal men more harm then good” (English; phrase).

Whether love causes humans more harm than benefit.

Here: The reported uncertainty follows a list of favourable changes, including courage, generosity, courtesy and energy.

Context: Burton attributes the assessment to Plutarch while retaining both the harms and the potentially improving effects of the passion.

Source wording and original alignment: whether love do mortal men more harm then good

Modern rendering: whether love does mortals more harm than good lust

BAL-0209-V003 · Lust and lusty

Printed “lust” (English; lemma).

Pleasure or delight.

Here: Troilus is with Criseyde in pleasurable peace, in the couplet Burton places among romance unions.

Context: Chaucer’s lovers are quoted within Burton’s marriage conclusion; the supplied note identifies the end of book 3, not the conclusion of the entire poem, and does not make them married.

Source wording and original alignment: in lust and in quiet

Modern rendering: in pleasure and at peace

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Lust supplies pleasure; quiet supplies peace. The two nouns remain separate.

Word and construction: Lusty contributes vigorous; too lascivious supplies the added accusation too lustful.

Sense relation: A further local application of the same sense, with its own agency and phrase alignment.

Maculae; cosmic dancing

Printed “Maculæ” (Latin; phrase).

Spots; plural of Latin macula.

Here: The spots enter Burton’s playful cosmic dance alongside planets; his identification as thirty-three Bourbonian planets remains unresolved.

Context: Burton reports competing astronomical descriptions with some say and attributes the sun-as-lyre-player phrase to Fromundus.

Source wording and original alignment: those thirty three Maculæ or Burbonian planet

Modern rendering: those thirty-three spots or Bourbonian planets

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Maculæ contributes spots; Bourbonian planets is the alternative description and the modern text pluralizes Burton’s printed planet.

Uncertainty: The thirty-three bodies and exact Fromundus passage, and the two Austrian bodies at Saturn in the continuation, remain unresolved; this is historical cosmological imagery.

Word and construction: Magnetique contributes magnetic; vertue supplies effective force or power.

magnetic

BAL-0215-V015 · Lodestone and adamant

Printed “magneticall” (English; lemma).

Operating by a supposed sympathetic or magnetic influence, including influence at a distance.

Here: Supposed sympathetic action is invoked for remedies against imposed love; it does not require a physical lodestone.

Context: Burton reports Cardano’s examples after saying magical remedies are not permitted, then calls the ensuing prescriptions absurd; the claims remain historical, not present medical advice.

Source wording and original alignment: magneticall medicines

Modern rendering: sympathetic remedies

Printed “magnetically” (English; lemma).

Here: Fresh wounds are said to heal through weapon salve acting by sympathy, rather than through direct application of a lodestone.

Context: Crollius and Goclenius defend the claim, Libavius opposes it and many dispute it. Burton next explains such cures through imagination and belief; the margin’s credulity differs from the body’s incredulity.

Source wording and original alignment: magnetically cured

Modern rendering: healed magnetically

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Magnetically describes the supposed mode of healing; cured supplies healed.

Sense relation: The adverb expresses the same supposed sympathetic mode of action in a disputed medical application.

BAL-0254-V006 · Make away

Printed “made an end of her miseries” (English; phrase).

Brought her sufferings to an end, here in an account ending with her death.

Here: The phrase concerns Joan of Spain after an unhappy life.

Context: It does not establish that she killed herself: the original Latin margin says she spent the rest of her time in distress, while the body gives a stronger causal story about both royal deaths.

Source wording and original alignment: made an end of her miseries

Modern rendering: brought her miseries to an end

Word and construction: The metaphor of ending is retained; no self-killing verb or reflexive object is supplied.

Uncertainty: Burton’s causal account is stronger than N11705; the manner of her death cannot be inferred from this expression.

BAL-0254-V001 · Make away

Printed “make away themselves” (English; phrase).

To kill oneself; make away means cause death, and themselves makes the people both agents and victims.

Here: Burton describes self-killing as an extreme result of anguish associated with want.

Context: The passage describes the distress of poverty; the following imperative verse is a historical expression of despair, not the edition’s instruction.

Source; Context passages: DJR-053-33

Printed “make thy self away” (English; phrase).

Citation key: make oneself away.

Here: The phrase occurs in Burton’s expanded English verse about despair under poverty.

Context: The command belongs to the quoted historical voice, after Latin attributed to Theognis; it is not a counsel of this article.

Source wording and original alignment: Goe make thy self away

Modern rendering: Go and put an end to yourself.

Word and construction: The modern euphemism means kill yourself in this verse; Go and preserves the imperative force as an attributed utterance.

Sense relation: The inverted object placement and second-person reflexive express the same self-killing sense.

Printed “make away himself” (English; phrase).

Citation key: make away oneself.

Here: A patient is reported determined to kill himself because of unfounded fear of punishment.

Context: He believes he has killed a man and cannot be dissuaded for three years; the passage does not establish either the alleged murder or a completed suicide.

Source wording and original alignment: would needs make away himself

Modern rendering: determined to take his own life

Word and construction: Would needs supplies determination; the phrase describes intent rather than an accomplished act.

Sense relation: The same action is contemplated under an unfounded belief, not narrated as completed.

Source wording and original alignment: often tempted, I say, to make away themselves

Modern rendering: often tempted, I say, to do away with themselves

Word and construction: Often and tempted retain frequency and non-completion; do away with is another euphemism for self-killing.

Sense relation: The same sense appears as fluctuating temptation.

Printed “made away themselves” (English; phrase).

Citation key: make away oneself.

Here: Two brothers’ deaths lead first to a punitive burial decision and then its revocation.

Context: Burton attributes the case to Foreest; further inquiry into suffering and loss of reason changes the judgment, and the next paragraph leaves the souls’ fate to God.

Source wording and original alignment: two melancholy brethren, that made away themselves

Modern rendering: two melancholy brothers who killed themselves

Word and construction: Made away becomes killed in the completed past; the reflexive preserves agency and object.

Sense relation: The same completed action is followed by reconsideration and pity, not an unqualified punitive conclusion.

Printed “malice” (English; lemma).

Hostile ill will, especially a disposition to devise injury.

Here: Malice and deadly hatred make the injured party imagine harm to an adversary and his family.

Context: Burton’s generalizing we satirizes the retaliatory response when material interests are touched; malice and hatred are coordinated, not declared identical.

Source wording and original alignment: what malice, deadly hatred can invent, that shall be done

Modern rendering: Whatever malice and deadly hatred can devise will be done

Word and construction: Malice retains its sense of hostile intention; deadly hatred is the accompanying disposition, not its translation.

Citation key: manure.

Here: Cultivated or improved by human skill.

Context: Burton declares the Arabian wilderness incapable of cultivation because of waterlessness, rocks and sand, contrasting it with watered Damascus; the absolute geographical generalization is his.

Source wording and original alignment: by no art can be manured

Modern rendering: no skill can cultivate

Word and construction: Art supplies skill; the passive be manured becomes active cultivate, preserving the negative no and the claimed incapacity.

Context passages: DJR-074-14, DJR-074-15, DJR-074-17, DJR-074-18

Printed “manured” (English; lemma).

Citation key: manure.

Here: Cultivated, worked or improved.

Context: Burton includes cultivated grounds among unhealthy sites in a compressed account attributed to Varro. The supplied comparison distinguishes the original speakers and the narrower warnings about riverside orientation and marshes.

Source wording and original alignment: marish and manured grounds

Modern rendering: marshy and cultivated land

Word and construction: Manured supplies cultivated, marish marshy, and grounds land; nothing in this phrase restricts cultivation to the addition of dung.

manure

BAL-0295-V002 · Manure

Printed “manure” (English; lemma).

Cultivation or improvement of land, used as a noun.

Here: The intensive working of land that Burton says follows industry and makes barren soil fertile.

Context: His economic claim praises industry; the following sheep example adds dung-fertilisation as a particular means rather than defining all manure narrowly.

Source wording and original alignment: much manure

Modern rendering: intensive cultivation

Word and construction: Manure supplies cultivation; much is rendered intensive in this account of extensive effort.

manure

BAL-0295-V003 · Manure

Printed “manured” (English; lemma).

Tend or cultivate, extended figuratively to a plant’s continued life in literature.

Here: Poets preserve the oak of Marius in verse after the physical tree has died.

Context: Burton’s literary-survival image occurs in the account of patronage and desire for fame; he imputes that motive to Cosimo while expressly conceding that sincere charity also exists.

Source wording and original alignment: set and manured by those ever-living wits

Modern rendering: planted and tended by those ever-living minds

Word and construction: Set supplies planted, manured tended and wits minds or writers; the plant, not the writers themselves, is what is tended.

Man’s estate; adulthood

BAL-0274-V004 · Estate

Printed “mans estate” (English; family).

The condition or stage of adult life.

Here: Children reach adulthood after their parents’ expenditure on education, then are allegedly neglected.

Context: Democritus’s speech in Burton’s retelling criticizes reversal of parental affection.

Source wording and original alignment: when they grow to mans estate

Modern rendering: when they reach adulthood

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Mans estate supplies adulthood; grow to becomes reach. The phrase denotes maturation, not inheritance of a man’s property.

Context passages: DJR-008-11, DJR-008-13

Mare liberum

BAL-0241-V040 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “Mare liberum” (Latin title; phrase).

The sea understood as open to navigation and commerce.

Here: Mare is sea and liberum its neuter singular adjective, free. The marginal reference identifies Grotius’s book; the phrase is a title invoked in a commercial dispute.

Context: Burton’s Tush rejects complacency about Dutch fishing and English dependency; invoking the title is not an endorsement of all Grotius’s argument.

Source wording and original alignment: Mare liberum

Modern rendering: the free sea

BAL-0234-V015 · Marriage

Printed “maritus” (Latin; lemma).

A husband.

Here: Maritus supplies husband, fidus faithful; conjux means wife in this coordination and chara supplies dear. Domi gives at home with the predicate, rather than modifying either spouse.

Context: Burton quotes a concordant household ideal. The following devotion examples include legendary and uncollated reports.

Source wording: chara domi conjux, fidusque maritus

Original wording: Quam cum chara domi conjux, fidusque maritus Unanimes degunt

Modern rendering: Than when a dear wife and faithful husband Live together at home in harmony

Alignment scope: Complete comparative subordinate clause with the locative redistributed

Word and construction: Maritus supplies husband and fidus faithful; conjux supplies wife and chara dear; domi becomes at home after live, and unanimes supplies in harmony. Quam cum gives than when.

BAL-0234-V001 · Marriage

Printed “marriage” (English; lemma).

The marital relationship or state of life.

Here: Unfortunate supplies the unhappiness; marriage itself names the relationship, which the same sentence calls honourable and potentially happy.

Context: Burton ranks unhappy marriage among causes of melancholy, conditional upon disagreement or unsuitable matching. The continuation makes distress reciprocal between husbands and wives.

Printed “marriage” (English; lemma).

Citation key: marriage.

Here: The thing refers back to marriage; the modern resolves that reference explicitly. Burton distinguishes the institution from the partners’ conduct.

Context: The denial occurs inside his supposedly sober anti-marriage argument. Happiness is conditional on spouses being temperate, wise and virtuous.

Source wording: In sober sadness, marriage is a bondage, a thralldom, an yoke, an hinderance to all good enterprises, (he hath married a wife and cannot come) a stop to all preferments, a rock on which many are saved, many impinge and are cast away: not that the thing is evill in it self or troublesome, but full of all contentment and happiness, one of the three things which please God, when a man and his wife agree together, an honorable and happy estate, who knows it not? If they be sober, wise, honest, as the Poet infers,

Original wording: not that the thing is evill in it self or troublesome

Modern rendering: Not that marriage itself is evil or troublesome

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Marriage replaces the anaphoric the thing; not negates the claim of inherent evil or trouble. The modern is a clarified clause rather than a word-for-word rendering.

Printed “marriage” (English; lemma).

Citation key: marriage.

Here: Marriage is presented as the last available remedy in the historical argument about love melancholy. Last, best and cure are claims made about it, not part of its lexical definition.

Context: The ensuing clause requires both lovers’ desires, cleared obstacles and absence of another remedy. The preceding treatment has considered unwilling lovers, parents, poverty and religious vows.

Source wording and original alignment: this of marriage, is the last and best refuge, and cure of Heroicall love

Modern rendering: marriage is the last and best refuge and cure for love melancholy

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: This of marriage is compressed to marriage; Heroicall love is the historical lovesickness rendered love melancholy.

Printed “marriage” (English; lemma).

Citation key: marriage.

Here: Marriage is the proposed union; the original or any other respect is moved beside poverty as a second subject in the modern.

Context: In Burton’s imagined polity the removal of financial barriers accompanies compulsory marriage and exclusions based on disability and supposed hereditary disease. It is not a general affirmation of free marital choice.

Source wording and original alignment: poverty shall hinder no man from marriage, or any other respect

Modern rendering: poverty or any other consideration shall prevent no one from marrying

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The modern makes the coordinated subjects explicit and recasts from marriage as from marrying; the complete clause gives equal scope despite reordered syntax.

Mathematical beauty

BAL-0202-V019 · Beauty

Printed “pulchritudo” (Latin; phrase).

Beauty; Latin feminine nominative singular, the subject of est.

Here: Mathematics is praised for a beauty superior to the show of wealth; Burton adds his own pleasure in surveying, maps, models and sundials.

Context: Attributed to Plutarch, with Burton’s separate English restatement; the later requirement for moderate bodily and mental exercise prevents making all study universally healthful.

Matrix

BAL-0218-V001 · Matrix and mother

Printed “Matrix or Wombe” (English; lemma).

Matrix and womb name the same reproductive organ in this anatomical list.

Here: The organ is one of the bodily parts that disordered humours were thought capable of making a source of melancholy.

Context: Burton begins with almost no part, then quotes Arculanus’s more categorical statement; the causal condition is that the part is disordered.

Mean estate; moderate condition

BAL-0274-V015 · Estate

Printed “mean estate” (English; family).

A moderate or humble condition: mean means moderate or lowly, and estate condition.

Here: Contentment makes little wealth sufficient and valuable to its possessor.

Context: Burton’s consolatory argument begins if thou couldst be content and continues with enough and no desire for more. The later opposing voice at DJR-092-05 challenges praise offered from security and demands practical relief.

Mentior

BAL-0272-V013 · Counterfeit

Printed “mentitus sum” (Latin; lemma).

I have feigned or simulated: first-person singular perfect of the deponent verb mentior, with active meaning.

Here: Cardan describes inwardly simulating pleasure through repeated thought when action was impossible or shameful.

Context: Cardan’s quoted self-description, defended by Burton as candid and useful to learners; it is not Burton’s own confession. The subsequent Gregory-attributed comparison concerns inward fantasy despite outward chastity, and its precise source remains unresolved. The astrological explanations remain historical claims.

Source wording and original alignment: quam facto implere non licuit, aut fecisse potentem puduit, cogitatione assiduâ mentitus sum voluptatem

Modern rendering: the pleasure I was unable to fulfil in action, or was ashamed to act on when I could, I have counterfeited through constant thought

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Mentitus sum supplies I have counterfeited: mentitus is the masculine participle referring to the quoted male speaker, and sum completes the finite perfect. Voluptatem is the accusative object pleasure; cogitatione assiduâ is the ablative means through constant thought. The preceding relative clause describes the alternatives of inability to fulfil and shame at acting when able.

BAL-0212-V005 · Quean and slut

Printed “meretrix” (Latin; lemma).

A prostitute or whore, here a deliberately stigmatized alternative to imperial wife.

Here: The Latin gives the stronger term that the separate English restatement renders through quean.

Context: Reported Heloise declaration, retaining Burton’s irregular tuæ; not a claim that Heloise actually practised prostitution.

Source wording and original alignment: mallem tuæ esse meretrix quam orbis imperatrix

Modern rendering: I would rather be your whore than empress of the world

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Meretrix supplies whore; the whole construction states a preferred relationship over imperial status.

meretrix medicorum

BAL-0212-V009 · Quean and slut

Printed “meretrix medicorum” (Latin; phrase).

The physicians’ prostitute or whore, a figurative designation.

Here: Urine is represented as a seductive and unreliable guide to diagnosis in the attack on medical uncertainty.

Context: Burton invokes Forestus and other physicians for the charge of deceptiveness. His subsequent reply distinguishes medical abuse from use and expressly honours medicine; the metaphor is not his final rejection of medical practice.

Source wording: meretrix medicorum, the most deceitfull thing of all

Original wording: meretrix medicorum

Modern rendering: the physicians’ whore

Alignment scope: Equal-scope Latin noun phrase and its modern English rendering.

Word and construction: Meretrix supplies whore; medicorum is genitive plural, of physicians. The phrase metaphorically describes urine, not an actual woman.

Translation layer: The modern text separately translates the Latin phrase and retains Burton’s following English description, the most deceitfull thing of all, as the most deceitful thing of all. The English accusation of deceit is not the literal definition of meretrix.

BAL-0289-V008 · Usury

Printed “usury” (English; phrase).

Moneylending at interest, associated here with debt and distress.

Here: Burton’s English aphorism narrows the immediately preceding Latin saying about debt and litigation.

Context: Commonly is the frequency qualification, not invariably. The following warning about surety concerns liability for another person’s debts, and the sequel broadens to quarrels and lawsuits.

Source; Context passages: DJR-056-01

Moderate beauty

BAL-0202-V020 · Beauty

Printed “statam formam” (Latin; phrase).

Moderate beauty or appearance: statam means moderate or measured, agreeing with formam, beauty or form, in the feminine accusative singular.

Here: A middle degree of attractiveness is proposed in marriage choice, not medium bodily height.

Context: Advice attributed to Ennius’s Melanippe through the context identified in Gellius; Burton then approves moderation but personally prefers beauty between the extremes when other advantages are equal, before returning to upbringing and character.

Source wording and original alignment: statam formam, si vis habere incolumem pudicitiam

Modern rendering: moderate beauty, if you wish to preserve chastity intact

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Statam formam is the object of the surrounding English take, rendered choose. Si vis introduces if you wish, habere means have or keep, and incolumem agrees with pudicitiam, chastity intact. Burton’s following middle size is separately rendered middling sort, neither too beautiful nor too ugly.

Qualification: The surrounding claims about beautiful or unattractive women are polemical stereotypes. The ugly-wife joke immediately supplies a contrary case; the wealth-only extreme is also rejected. At DJR-145-63 the jealous husband projects his own valuation onto others, even if his wife is not generally judged beautiful.

modest ambition

BAL-0244-V003 · Ambition

Printed “modest ambition” (English; phrase).

Modest means restrained or moderate; ambition is the wish for honour and advancement.

Here: A positive, restrained form accompanies honourable rivalry and public service.

Context: Burton expressly allows this form and illustrates it with Themistocles, Miltiades, Achilles and Alexander.

Source wording and original alignment: There is a modest ambition

Modern rendering: There is a restrained ambition

Word and construction: Modest restricts the kind of ambition rather than describing embarrassment.

Printed “modo absit lascivia” (Latin; phrase).

Provided lewdness is absent: modo introduces a condition; absit means let it be absent or provided it is absent; lascivia is lewdness.

Here: Burton permits conversation, games, singing, dancing, tavern visits and greeting kisses under a condition of modest conduct.

Context: Burton’s own qualified permission, using Boemus and interpreting patristic censure as directed at abuse.

Source; Context passages: DJR-122-37

Printed “monachatus” (Latin; lemma).

The monastic state or way of life.

Here: Monachatus is a noun distinct from the preceding Votum cœlibatus, the vow of celibacy. The margin lists related practices rather than two synonyms.

Context: The body’s attack concerns claims of religious merit and bodily mortification; its sweeping extension across religions is Burton’s polemical generalization.

Printed “Monasteries” (English; lemma).

Citation key: monastery.

Here: Monasteries here are convents for the daughters in the reported custom. The complete construction keeps the names and placement, while the modern shifts from unnamed agents acting on the daughters to passive clauses about the names and daughters.

Context: Burton rejects the view that only beautiful women are fit to marry. The marginal traveller’s name-changing story runs in the opposite direction from his body account and must remain distinct.

Source wording and original alignment: if deformed, they change their lovely names of Lucia, Cynthia, Camæna, call them Dorothie, Ursula, Briget, and so put them into Monasteries

Modern rendering: If unattractive, their pretty names—Lucia, Cynthia, Camena—are changed: they are called Dorothy, Ursula or Bridget and put into convents

Alignment scope: Complete conditional name-changing and placement construction recast from active to passive

Word and construction: Monasteries supplies convents. The original unnamed agents change the daughters’ names, call them by new ones and put them into houses; the modern instead makes their names and then the daughters the subjects of passive verbs, preserving each action and the conditional.

BAL-0290-V010 · Commonwealth

Printed “morbos reipub.” (Latin; phrase).

Diseases of the commonwealth: morbos means diseases; reipub. abbreviates the genitive reipublicae, of the commonwealth.

Here: A medical metaphor applied to Burton’s catalogue of allegedly idle, criminal, begging and discontented people.

Context: Burton attributes the expression to Lycurgus in Plutarch, but redirects a wider catalogue of social diseases toward these people; his separate English intensifies the image to boils.

munificentia

BAL-0230-V024 · Gifts and liberality

Printed “munificentia” (Latin; lemma).

Generosity or lavish giving.

Here: Munificentia is ablative singular generosity; incredibili supplies incredible and the English with expresses the ablative manner. Burton follows the Latin with his own expanded English bounty and munificence.

Context: Giovio’s reported Leo X rewards hunters lavishly only when pleased by his sport, contrasting abusive anger after disappointment. The condition and attribution prevent this from being unconditional praise.

BAL-0236-V009 · Adultery

Printed “mœcharetur” (Latin; lemma).

Engage in sexual intercourse that violates a marriage.

Here: The imperfect subjunctive is governed by negative-purpose ne. The modern recasts the negative purpose as prevention and supplies her from Venus.

Context: Burton’s surveillance story is attributed to Philostratus, but the supplied comparison says the letter describes a sandal betraying adultery, not Vulcan making surveillance shoes or Mars protesting. The broader beauty-versus-chastity claim is polemical.

Source; Context passages: DJR-145-58

nice and curious

BAL-0247-V002 · Curiosity

Printed “nice & curious” (English; phrase).

Nice and curious here both mean excessively exacting or scrupulous.

Here: The paired adjectives criticize rejection of all formerly Catholic ceremonies, even in indifferent matters.

Context: Burton attacks some schismatics at the opposite extreme from the religious practices he has just mocked; he is not condemning every precise distinction.

Source wording and original alignment: nice & curious

Modern rendering: over-scrupulous

Word and construction: The modern adjective renders the pair jointly; it must not be assigned separately as a unique translation of either component.

nose of wax

BAL-0294-V030 · Law and justice

Printed "a nose of wax" (English; phrase).

Something pliable and moulded at will: nose is the shaped object and wax the yielding material.

Here: A metaphor amid laws and judgments altered through influence.

Context: The syntax moves between laws and the swayed judge; the image condemns malleability without resolving every referent in the following uncertain clause.

Source wording and original alignment: as a nose of wax

Modern rendering: moulded like a nose of wax

Word and construction: Moulded is supplied to explain the simile, rather than being a separate original verb.

BAL-0234-V021 · Marriage

Printed “nubere” (Latin; lemma).

Marry, conventionally said of a woman taking a husband.

Here: Nubere is an infinitive, marrying; dulce est supplies is sweet, and nisi gives the negative condition. Moriar is the oath’s may I die, not an authorial wish for death.

Context: The line comes from a literary Vestal’s declaration, not a documented trial or a universal account of women’s wishes.

Source wording and original alignment: moriar, nisi nubere dulce est

Printed “nupta est” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: nubo.

Here: Nupta est is was married, a feminine participial predicate; de nuptiis concerns marriage and brevi supplies soon.

Context: Burton reports through Busbecq a woman who passed herself off as a man and married another woman. The exact source is unlocated, and the wording does not establish a modern identity or an independently verified event.

Source wording and original alignment: de nuptiis sermonem iniit, & brevi nupta est

Modern rendering: she opened negotiations for marriage and was soon married

Alignment scope: Coordinated predicates with subject supplied from the preceding sentence

Word and construction: The coordinated Latin predicates receive an explicit she from the preceding female subject; the first means opened a discussion about marriage, the second was soon married.

numerical

BAL-0240-V003 · Inseparable and individual

Printed “numericall” (English; lemma).

Numerically identical: the selfsame particular thing, not merely something of the same kind.

Here: Numericall sharpens same into particular identity. The phrase is explicitly negated in the larger construction: the place in a river may be the same, though the water is not the very same water.

Context: Burton uses faces, river and musical instrument analogies to organize differing symptoms without pretending that the contradictions disappear.

Source wording and original alignment: the same numericall water

Modern rendering: the very same water

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The same numericall becomes the very same; water is retained. The surrounding though not remains outside this selected noun phrase but is essential to the local argument.

Nundinatio; trafficking in appointments

BAL-0267-V012 · Church patronage

Printed “nundinationes” (Latin; lemma).

Dealings or trading; here shameful trafficking in church offices.

Here: The Latin turn accuses scholars and universities themselves of enabling the traffic through negligence and greed.

Context: Burton now says the same, perhaps greater, guilt can be charged against his own community, after earlier blaming patrons more heavily.

Source; Context passages: DJR-050-01

nuptial rites

BAL-0234-V029 · Marriage

Printed “nuptiall rites” (English; phrase).

The sexual consummation of marriage, expressed euphemistically as wedding rites.

Here: The phrase concerns the wedding night in this story; the modern makes consummation explicit rather than describing a second public ceremony.

Context: Venus’s supernatural obstruction is part of a reported legend, resolved by returning the ring; it is not an authenticated event.

Source wording and original alignment: when he should come to perform those nuptiall rites

Modern rendering: when he was about to consummate the marriage

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The when-clause uses perform those nuptiall rites as a euphemism, rendered was about to consummate the marriage. Should come to gives prospective timing, not moral obligation.

BAL-0231-V019 · Occasion and opportunity

Printed “opportunity” (English; family).

An opening or set of circumstances available for exploitation.

Here: Opportunity and occasion describe conditions Burton says the Devil exploits. Best and sole are separate intensifiers; the modern very occasion does not expressly reproduce sole as only. These supplies the antecedent list as a grammatical subject.

Context: Burton’s universal assertion about visions and bodily/environmental precursors belongs to religious polemic and historical physiology. He has explicitly defended moderate, seasonable fasting, so this must not be read as condemning all fasting or validating demonic causation.

Source wording and original alignment: The best opportunity and sole occasion the Divell takes to delude them

Modern rendering: These give the Devil his best opportunity and very occasion to deceive them

Alignment scope: Sentence-level recasting with explicit sole/very qualification

Word and construction: The original fragment is recast as a finite sentence with These give and his supplied; delude becomes deceive. Sole is rendered very rather than the explicit exclusive only, a qualification in the modern alignment.

Alignment qualification: The two formulations are aligned at sentence level but differ in the explicit force of sole/very; neither is a neutral causal finding.

Opportunity and importunity

BAL-0203-V003 · Courtship and wooing

Printed “opportunity and importunity” (English; phrase).

Access or favourable occasion, joined with persistent solicitation.

Here: Living nearby or in one household supplies repeated occasions for familiarity; Burton connects this with limited alternatives and hasty attachments.

Context: Burton’s generalization, with literary illustrations and an almost qualification in the later near-inevitability claim.

opportunus

BAL-0231-V017 · Occasion and opportunity

Printed “opportunaque” (Latin; lemma).

Useful or suitable things; Latin neuter plural opportuna with enclitic -que, and.

Here: Multa means many things or much, didici I learned. The modern folds the coordinated useful things into much that was useful rather than separately translating and.

Context: Burton adapts Giovio’s Vatican recollection. Giovio’s thirty-seven years must remain distinct from Burton’s own thirty; the citation is an adaptation, not a verbatim self-description.

Source wording and original alignment: multa opportunaque didici

Modern rendering: I learned much that was useful

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The coordinated substantival adjectives are consolidated as much that was useful; -que is not separately expressed, and I is supplied by the first-person verb.

opportunus

BAL-0231-V018 · Occasion and opportunity

Printed “opportuna” (Latin; lemma).

Timely or appropriately timed; Latin feminine singular adjective.

Here: Opportuna qualifies the sexual activity understood from the context. Nec supplies nor, prodest helps; it, does and even when make the elliptical English construction explicit. Timely activity is still denied benefit except under the following stated conditions.

Context: The historical medical margin adds a timing qualification not stated identically in the body. Burton’s surrounding unless/except restrictions must remain; none of the passage is adopted as present-day sexual or medical advice.

Source wording and original alignment: nec opportuna prodest

Modern rendering: nor does it help even when timely

Alignment scope: Original marginal wording aligned with its supplied editorial note translation

Word and construction: The short Latin predication is expanded as a concessive timing clause; even when expresses the force of opportuna within the negative statement, not an independent guarantee of benefit.

Parasite

BAL-0281-V004 · Parasite

Printed “Parasites” (English; lemma).

People living by pleasing and flattering patrons.

Here: Some writers produce work to flatter powerful men for their advantage.

Context: Burton’s attack on scribblers distinguishes vanity, need and money from the particular parasitic motive. The ensuing Cardan quotation does not forbid all publishing but allows genuine invention.

BAL-0296-V002 · War and peace

Printed “peace” (English; lemma).

Freedom from war or hostile conflict; public concord.

Here: The settled condition that people perversely abandon when they long for war.

Context: The literary Democritus gives this as a reason for laughter; Hippocrates subsequently answers with human need and uncertain hopes.

Source wording and original alignment: When men live in peace, they covet war

Modern rendering: When people live in peace, they long for war

Word and construction: Peace retains public concord and war armed conflict; covet is long for, not merely seek wealth.

Printed “portion” (English; lemma).

Citation key: portion.

Here: Portion means property brought to marriage; great means large, and marriage is made explicit in the modern.

Context: Money is an attraction in the world’s eyes at least; Burton condemns those who value it above conduct and other qualities. The following Latin and English social-breeding comparisons remain distinct adaptations.

Source wording and original alignment: a great portion

Modern rendering: a large marriage portion

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Great supplies large; portion becomes marriage portion with the contextual marriage qualifier explicit.

Context passages: DJR-122-02, DJR-122-03

Printed “portion” (English; lemma).

Citation key: portion.

Here: Portion is the expected marriage provision, here figuratively replaced by upbringing. No … but means none except, not absolute absence of every advantage.

Context: Burton’s Athenais inheritance story differs from a later parallel allowing a small cash inheritance; neither that parallel nor the source names establish his immediate source.

Source wording and original alignment: no portion but her bringing up

Modern rendering: no dowry except her upbringing

portion

BAL-0238-V012 · Dowry and jointure

Printed “portion” (English; lemma).

An allotted share of property or an inheritance.

Here: Portion here means the woman’s inheritance, not specifically property brought to marriage. All supplies whole.

Context: Burton compares his own charitable use of knowledge to Camden’s hospital-foundation story; identifying the literary source does not independently verify the event.

Source wording and original alignment: all her portion

Modern rendering: her whole inheritance

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The indexed form contributes the defined sense to this complete aligned unit.

BAL-0238-V013 · Dowry and jointure

Printed “portion” (English; lemma).

An allotted share or provision.

Here: Portion becomes a figurative provision or gift in the wife herself. Good supplies the favorable valuation; the sentence does not assign her a sum of marriage money.

Context: Burton’s scriptural praise follows the express refusal to condemn all wives for some. His printed chapter references and pronoun differ in places from the biblical parallels.

Source and modern wording: A good wife is a good portion

BAL-0216-V001 · Cupid

Printed “Porus” (English; family).

Porus is personified resource or abundance; Penia is personified poverty.

Here: Their parentage gives Love an allegorical ancestry combining abundance with want.

Context: Burton retells what Socrates recounts in Plato and directs the reader to Ficino for an allegorical interpretation; his wording changes important actions from the Platonic story.

Source wording and original alignment: Porus the God of bounty and wealth; Penia or poverty

Modern rendering: Porus, the god of abundance and wealth. Penia, or Poverty

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Each name has its own explanation: Porus is glossed by abundance/wealth, Penia by Poverty.

Alignment qualification: The alignment spans the modern sentence break between the two named figures; it preserves the two coordinated descriptions without suggesting that the names are synonyms.

Context passages: DJR-113-06, DJR-113-08

possessed by money

BAL-0245-V007 · Covetousness

Printed “possessed by their money” (English; phrase).

To be possessed is to be held or controlled; possessors are owners.

Here: Burton reverses apparent ownership: money controls those who seem to own it.

Context: The reversal describes the covetous men just distinguished from rich people as such.

Source wording and original alignment: rather possessed by their money, then possessors

Modern rendering: possessed by their money rather than its possessors

Word and construction: Money is the controlling agent in the passive clause, and the human owners become its objects.

poverty

BAL-0258-V001 · Poverty and riches

Printed “Poverty” (English; lemma).

Material want: insufficient possessions or means of support.

Here: Poverty has a religiously favourable valuation only under the stated wise, regenerate and contented perspective; worldly judgement treats it as shame and suffering.

Context: Burton states both valuations and qualifies the first; he does not simply call every deprivation a blessing.

BAL-0284-V002 · Proletary

Printed “proletariique” (Latin; lemma).

And low fellows: nominative plural proletarii, people disparaged as being of the lowest rank, with the attached conjunction -que, and.

Here: A socially contemptuous label joins Harpies as an accusation against those obstructing the good of Church and universities.

Context: Burton’s Latin institutional polemic expressly excepts the many learned and reputable clergy and scholars. The conditional claim is that both institutions would flourish still more without corrupt obstruction. Social contempt belongs to the polemic, not to the edition’s classification of people by birth or wealth.

Source; Context passages: DJR-050-09

BAL-0284-V001 · Proletary

Printed “proletaries” (English; lemma).

People drawn from the common or lower ranks; here, common soldiers.

Here: The many dead soldiers receive little or no historical recognition, while a general may briefly retain a name.

Context: Burton’s rhetorical example says fifteen thousand are killed but scarcely fifteen remembered, perhaps only the general. It is not a documented casualty count. His surrounding criticism of false honour explicitly preserves the necessity and honour of soldiering as the world is, while condemning unjust war and destructive vainglory.

Printed “pudor” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: pudor.

Here: Tender modesty reveals the lovers’ feelings in the attributed Latin verse.

Context: The following English couplet is Burton’s separate adaptation; this literary interpretation does not make all blushing a sign of romantic consent.

Source wording and original alignment: Et tener affectum prodit utrique pudor

Modern rendering: And tender modesty reveals the feeling in them both

Word and construction: Et gives and, tener tender, pudor modesty, prodit reveals, affectum the feeling and utrique in them both.

Sense relation: The modest feeling has an expressive role in a literary account of love.

Printed “pudor” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: pudor.

Here: The fictional lover bids modesty farewell along with chastity and honour.

Context: Parthenis’s declaration is reported from Aristaenetus; the printed book 6 reference is unusable for the usual two-book collection. The body orders shame, honour and honesty differently.

Edition page: 517; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N10032

Source wording and original alignment: Valeat pudor

Modern rendering: Farewell modesty

Word and construction: Valeat supplies farewell or let it go; pudor modesty.

Modern container: note

Sense relation: The same moral restraint is deliberately rejected by a fictional speaker.

Context passages: DJR-129-03, DJR-129-05

Printed “shame” (English; lemma).

Citation key: shame.

Here: The English declaration renounces shame before honour and chastity.

Context: This is Parthenis’s fictional speech, not Burton’s own renunciation.

Source wording and original alignment: farewell shame, farewell honour, farewell honesty

Modern rendering: farewell shame, farewell honour, farewell chastity

Word and construction: Shame and honour remain; honesty becomes chastity. The Latin margin has modesty, chastity, honour in a different order.

Sense relation: The English body supplies the same renunciation of restraint with its own wording and order.

BAL-0257-V015 · Shame

Printed “pudorem” (Latin; lemma).

Shame, used euphemistically for the private parts.

Context: This is an attributed allegory of dependence and degradation, not a clinical case. The supplied translation preserves the euphemism his shame.

pudor aut juvat aut lædit

BAL-0257-V008 · Shame

Printed “pudor aut juvat aut lædit” (Latin; phrase).

Bashfulness either helps or harms: pudor bashfulness, aut … aut either … or, juvat helps and lædit harms.

Here: Lodovicus’s maxim allows opposite effects, before Burton says it harms the sufferers under discussion.

Context: The body reverses the order to hurts or helps; Platter’s dismissal is conditional on fear or suspicion, and the public-attention quotation is sarcastic.

Edition page: 397; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Source wording and original alignment: pudor aut juvat aut lædit

Modern rendering: bashfulness either helps or harms

Word and construction: Each component is translated; the original marginal order remains distinct from Burton’s body.

pudor malus

BAL-0257-V009 · Shame

Printed “pudor malus” (Latin; phrase).

Bad or harmful shame: pudor shame and malus bad.

Here: False shame prevents disclosure of untreated suffering.

Context: The Horatian image follows an instruction to disclose mental trouble; the subsequent paragraph says concealment worsens it. This is Burton’s counsel, not a new treatment recommendation.

Source wording and original alignment: Stultorum incurata pudor malus ulcera celat

Modern rendering: False shame hides the untreated sores of fools

Word and construction: Pudor malus gives false shame, celat hides, incurata untreated, ulcera sores and stultorum of fools. False is a contextual rendering of harmful or misplaced shame.

quaere peregrinum

BAL-0261-V007 · Abraham men

Printed “quære peregrinum” (Latin; phrase).

Latin quaere means seek or find; peregrinum means a stranger or someone from elsewhere.

Here: The instruction means find someone who does not know you in the Horatian rejection.

Context: Horace’s neighbors reject a known deceiver despite real injury; Burton inserts the line into his satire of indiscriminate refusal. The source character’s history does not establish guilt in every petitioner.

Source wording and original alignment: quære peregrinum quarumlibet rerum inhonestam & insatiabilem cupiditatem

BAL-0245-V004 · Covetousness

Printed “quarumlibet rerum inhonestam & insatiabilem cupiditatem” (Latin; phrase).

Cupiditatem means desire; inhonestam, dishonourable; insatiabilem, insatiable; quarumlibet rerum, for things of any kind.

Here: The Latin definition attributed to Augustine extends the object beyond money, while Burton’s own English gloss narrows it to gain.

Context: Burton reports Augustine’s definition and then supplies his own English; the two object-ranges should remain distinct.

Source wording and original alignment: quarumlibet rerum inhonestam & insatiabilem cupiditatem

Modern rendering: a dishonourable and insatiable desire for things of any kind

Word and construction: The complete Latin construction has the same scope as this fresh rendering; things of any kind comes from quarumlibet rerum, not from cupiditatem alone.

Qualification: Burton’s adjacent an unhonest and unsatiable desire of gain is narrower than the Latin. The supplied modern column preserves it separately as a dishonourable and insatiable desire for gain.

Printed “Quean” (English; lemma).

An abusive designation for a sexually disreputable woman.

Here: Heloise’s reported preference places a stigmatized personal bond above imperial marriage and rank.

Context: Burton condenses Heloise’s declaration; the English quean/queen contrast is his sharpened rank-pun.

Source wording and original alignment: his vassal, his Quean, then the worlds Empresse or Queen

Modern rendering: his slave, his mistress, than the world’s empress or queen

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Quean contributes the sexually stigmatized mistress; vassal supplies slave and Queen the contrasting rank.

BAL-0212-V008 · Quean and slut

Printed “quean” (English; lemma).

A disparaging name for a woman.

Here: Fortunata’s wealth transforms the reception of a formerly despised woman.

Context: Burton adapts Petronius: her ascent to heaven is social elevation, not death, as the supplied note explains.

Source wording and original alignment: a base quean

Modern rendering: a low woman

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Quean contributes woman under a contemptuous description; base supplies low. The full phrase conveys the judgement of disparaged standing.

quid pro quo

BAL-0256-V007 · Revenge

Printed “quid pro quo” (Latin; phrase).

Something for something: quid means something, pro for or in return for, quo something in that relation.

Here: The phrase restates reciprocal censure or requital.

Context: It accompanies lex talionis in the author’s playful defence; it does not here denote an allegation of a corrupt bargain.

rational love

BAL-0200-V010 · Love

Printed “Rationall Love” (English; phrase).

Love associated with knowledge or intellect.

Here: Burton calls this proper to human beings, then extends the discussion to God and angels before returning to mortal human love.

Context: Burton’s classification moves between human faculties and a theological hierarchy; its transition remains visible.

Source wording and original alignment: Rationall Love

Modern rendering: rational love

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Rational modifies love as the third category after natural and sentient love.

Qualification: The text itself says both proper to men and appears in God, Angels, Men; these statements are not silently harmonized.

Reduce

BAL-0283-V002 · Plausible

Printed “reduce” (English; lemma).

Bring back or restore.

Here: The people addressed are to be restored to health, as the modern text makes explicit.

Context: Burton’s counsel is to seek restoration, not a guarantee that gentle persuasion cures every sufferer. The conditional harsher sequel remains part of the historical argument.

Source; Context passages: DJR-084-28

Source wording and original alignment: by all plausible means to seek to reduce them

Modern rendering: try by every agreeable means to bring them back to health

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Seek supplies try, reduce bring back, them them; to health specifies the intended restored state from the medical context. By every agreeable means translates the preceding original by all plausible means, so the modern rearranges that adjunct within this construction.

sanctus ambitus

BAL-0292-V015 · Utopia

Printed “sanctus ambitus” (Latin; phrase).

Holy ambition: sanctus means holy or pious, and ambitus means canvassing or pursuit of office, here ambition.

Here: The aspirant’s pious justification for seeking an imaginary ecclesiastical dignity.

Context: Burton recalls More’s joke but changes bishopric to archbishopric; the phrase does not prove the disinterestedness of every real office-seeker.

Satyriasis

BAL-0219-V001 · Satyriasis and priapism

Printed “Satyriasis” (Latin; lemma).

Satyriasis is a historical term for excessive or uncontrolled male sexual desire.

Here: It is one of the conditions said by the cited medical authorities to follow retention of generative fluid.

Context: Burton reports Mercurialis and other authorities; Galen’s preceding claim is expressly restricted to some people and prolonged retention.

Source wording and original alignment: Priapismus, Satyriasis

Modern rendering: priapism, satyriasis

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Satyriasis names desire; the other coordinated term names a bodily condition. The paired list does not identify them.

Satyriasis and priapism

BAL-0219-V004 · Satyriasis and priapism

Printed “satyriasis, priapismus” (Latin; family).

Two historical medical names, respectively excessive male desire and persistent erection.

Here: Their pairing now forms part of a polemical catalogue mixing diseases, sexual conduct, vices and crimes.

Context: Burton asserts that rash religious vows produce these evils; the claim belongs to his attack on compulsory celibacy and is not verified by the list itself.

Scede

BAL-0279-V005 · Legal evidence

Printed “scede” (English; lemma).

A written slip or short written document.

Here: The slip introduces the comparison with a Spartan message used to commend brevity in agreements.

Context: Burton applies ancient authorities to concise legal drafting. The scytale comparison concerns a message associated with matching rods, not simply a short property deed.

Source wording and original alignment: that scede

Modern rendering: that written slip

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Scede contributes written slip; that remains the demonstrative.

Qualification: The printed Sytala Laconica is rendered Laconian scytale in the supplied text. Cicero’s cited letter number and Burton’s interpretation as praise of brevity remain distinct from the located parallel.

Se accommodare necessitati

BAL-0288-V012 · Temporize

Printed “se accommodat” (Latin; phrase).

Accommodates himself; reflexive third-person present.

Here: The maxim praises responding wisely to necessity.

Context: Burton limits it to what cannot be helped or amended, then urges playing an unchosen throw skilfully. This qualified positive use is not proof that all opportunism is virtuous. The exact Latin version and Epictetus locator remain unreconciled.

Source; Context passages: DJR-093-03

Source wording and original alignment: necessitati qui se accommodat, sapit

Modern rendering: Whoever accommodates himself to necessity is wise

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Necessitati is dative, to necessity, with accommodat; qui is whoever, se himself, and sapit is wise. The following English suits himself to the time is Burton’s separate restatement. In that separate English restatement, suits himself to the time means adapts himself to the times, rather than translating Latin necessitati word for word.

Seed

BAL-0220-V002 · Seed

Printed “seed” (English; lemma).

Generative material through which a living being produces another of its kind.

Here: Seed mediates the reproductive operation of the vegetative faculty.

Context: Burton describes the faculty’s function and announces three subordinate operations, but supplies only the first.

Source wording and original alignment: Generation, which begets another by meanes of seed, like unto it self, to the perpetual preservation of the Species

Modern rendering: reproduction, which through seed produces another like itself, perpetually preserving the species

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Seed names the means; production of another like itself and preservation of the species define the faculty’s operation, not seed alone.

Seeds of fire

BAL-0220-V016 · Seed

Printed “seeds of fire” (English; phrase).

A figurative latent source or germ of fiery activity within the humour.

Here: The reproductive image explains the supposed capacity of heating melancholy to develop into frenzy.

Context: Burton attributes the image to Sennert on Crato’s authority within conditional humoral prognostics.

Source wording and original alignment: seminarius ignis in this humour, the very seeds of fire

Modern rendering: this humour contains “a seed-bearing fire,” the very seeds of fire

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The Latin seminarius ignis and Burton’s English seeds of fire are related but differently constructed images; the modern text translates the Latin and retains the English gloss.

A person serving another in a subordinate position.

Here: Servant overlaps here with the enslaved person of Seneca’s source. The first-person speaker claims shared humanity and possibly greater worth before God, not a change in legal status.

Context: Burton turns Seneca’s remarks about slaves into a servant’s appeal. The margin prints Letter 74 where the parallel is 47.1; peradventure qualifies the comparison of spiritual worth.

Printed “silly” (English; lemma).

Unsuspecting or inexperienced.

Here: Newly arrived travellers are vulnerable to procurers who gather information and feign acquaintance.

Context: Burton’s hostile account combines an adapted Plautine scene with exaggerated Maserius-attributed claims about snares irresistible even to exemplars of chastity. These are literary and moral allegations, not evidence that all travellers or sex workers act as described.

Source wording and original alignment: silly travellers

Modern rendering: unsuspecting travellers

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Silly supplies unsuspecting; travellers remains travellers. The word occurs in Burton’s English prose after the Latin verse, not in that verse itself.

Printed “silly” (English; lemma).

Poor or pitiable.

Here: The lovesick shepherd neglects flocks and farm while mourning and burning with desire.

Context: Burton’s English verse follows Latin attributed to Mantuan. Silly is present in the English, not an equivalent of an adjective in the Latin lines. The Ovid margin supports neglected flocks but also describes attention to appearance, qualifying Burton’s broader neglect claim.

Printed “slaves” (English; lemma).

Citation key: slave.

Here: Slaves are people subjected for life to the person they wronged in Burton’s penal proposal.

Context: The modern sentence expresses for life before its list of punishments. DJR-017-03 rejects hereditary slavery but does not retract this penal condition.

Source wording and original alignment: otherwise they shal be condemned to the gallies, mines, be his slaves whom they offended, during their lives

Modern rendering: Otherwise they shall be condemned for life to the galleys or mines, or to slavery under the person they wronged.

Alignment scope: Equal-scope complete sentence with shared duration

Word and construction: Be his slaves becomes to slavery under the person they wronged. The modern for life precedes the coordinated penalties and preserves during their lives within the complete sentence.

sodomia

BAL-0214-V001 · Sodomy

Printed “Sodomiæ” (Latin; lemma).

A historical condemnatory category of sexual conduct, here applied to sexual relations between males.

Here: The phrase labels human sexual conduct after alleged human–animal unions and fabulous offspring. The preceding Pauline quotation and following catalogue of male attachments specify the male–male context; this is not a modern identity category.

Context: Burton’s extended Latin catalogue mingles myth, allegations and hostile ethnic generalizations; these do not establish biological facts or modern sexual identities.

Source wording and original alignment: peccatum Sodomiæ

Modern rendering: the sin of sodomy

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Sodomiæ supplies of sodomy; peccatum supplies sin. The complete phrase makes condemnation explicit.

sodomia

BAL-0214-V002 · Sodomy

Printed “Sodomia” (Latin; lemma).

A historical condemnatory category of sexual conduct, continuing the male–male context of the preceding catalogue.

Here: Diana makes the condemned practice an alleged object of worship or cherished idol.

Context: Burton’s hostile generalizations about peoples and regions, with Busbecq named in the margin; not verified population descriptions.

Source wording and original alignment: Diana Romanorum Sodomia

Modern rendering: Sodomy is the Romans’ Diana

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Sodomia is sodomy; Diana supplies the idol metaphor and Romanorum identifies its alleged adherents. English is makes explicit the copula implicit in the Latin nominal sentence.

Translator-supplied words: is: English copula made explicit for the Latin nominal sentence

BAL-0214-V005 · Sodomy

Printed “Sodomitæ” (Latin; lemma).

People accused of conduct condemned as sodomy.

Here: The word is one item in Bale’s overlapping list of sexual accusations about religious houses.

Context: Burton expressly says he is using Bale’s words; the Protestant polemic is not independent substantiation of misconduct.

Source wording and original alignment: Sodomitæ

Modern rendering: sodomites

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The plural Sodomitæ corresponds to sodomites, not to all the preceding differentiated insults.

Context passages: DJR-114-33, DJR-114-34

sodomite

BAL-0214-V006 · Sodomy

Printed “Sodomites” (English; lemma).

People accused of conduct condemned as sodomy.

Here: The accusation is applied to pagan gods to argue their unworthiness of worship.

Context: Burton’s Christian polemic, with Mornay cited: moral judgements about myth, not neutral descriptions of identities.

Source wording and original alignment: incestious Sodomites

Modern rendering: incestuous sodomites

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

sodomy

BAL-0214-V003 · Sodomy

Printed “sodomy” (English; lemma).

A historical label for condemned sexual acts, overlapping with buggery.

Here: The paired words intensify a catalogue of conduct that the alleged provision of numerous partners fails to prevent.

Context: Burton’s account of rulers and nobles, following a selection narrative attributed to Giovio; the allegations and their general reach remain unverified.

Source and modern wording: sodomy, buggery

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Speak and write freely

BAL-0282-V007 · Parrhesia

Printed “freely speak and write” (English; phrase).

Speak and write openly, independently of another person’s approval or political allegiance.

Here: Burton transfers Lucian’s ideal for a historian to the political writer.

Context: The claim follows Burton’s warning that truth breeds hatred and that he must not speak too harshly. His next paragraph acknowledges good laws but questions their effectiveness; this passage does not establish a general legal right to unrestricted expression.

Source wording and original alignment: He that will freely speak and write

Modern rendering: whoever means to speak and write freely

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Will means intends or means to; freely qualifies both speak and write. The modern preserves the prospective condition, not a report that every political writer actually enjoys independence.

Context passages: DJR-015-24, DJR-015-26, DJR-015-27

Speak my mind freely

BAL-0282-V008 · Parrhesia

Printed “speak my minde freely” (English; phrase).

Express my thoughts openly and without restraint.

Here: The author demands festive licence to say what he thinks and announces that he will take it even if denied.

Context: Burton first claims to spare people while censuring vices, and attributes offence to the reader’s guilt; this is his self-exculpatory argument, not evidence that objectors are guilty. His Saturnalian and Vacunalian literary defence then moves from defiance to immediate recantation, fear, apology and promised sobriety at 019-32–36. It is not a stable assertion that he fears no consequences.

Source; Context passages: DJR-019-30

Source wording and original alignment: speak my minde freely

Modern rendering: speak my mind freely

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modern regularizes minde to mind and retains the phrase. In the original it continues the preceding why may I not question, while the later declaration of taking liberty supplies a different assertive modality.

Printed “freenesse of speech” (English; phrase).

Citation key: Freedom of speech.

Freedom or frankness in expressing oneself.

Here: Burton denies that his frankness causes offence and blames the reader’s conscience instead.

Context: The preceding conditional distinguishes guilt from innocence, while the denial is Burton’s own satirical defence. The persons/vices limitation and accusation of self-betrayal do not establish an objector’s actual guilt.

Source wording and original alignment: it is not my freenesse of speech, but a guilty conscience, a gauled back of his own that makes him winch

Modern rendering: It is not my freedom of speech that makes him flinch, but his guilty conscience, a sore on his own back

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Freenesse of speech supplies freedom of speech. The complete reordered sentence retains not…but and the sore-back figure; the claim assigns the flinching to conscience rather than to the author’s speech.

Species of beauty

BAL-0202-V005 · Beauty

Printed “species of beauty” (English; phrase).

Perceptible forms or appearances of beauty.

Here: These forms reach eyes and ears or are conceived inwardly; the formulation is mediated through the authorities Burton cites.

Context: Burton’s report of a Platonic conclusion and Valesius’s inference; the supplied note distinguishes this from Hippias Major’s unresolved ending.

Source wording and original alignment: species of beauty

Modern rendering: Forms of beauty

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Species means forms or appearances, not biological kinds.

Qualification: The edition notes that Hippias Major ends without an agreed definition; Burton’s positive definition is not its exact conclusion.

Sperma

BAL-0220-V012 · Seed

Printed “sperma” (Latin; lemma).

Generative material, here attributed to a woman by historical reproductive theory.

Here: Sperma is the object of the unnamed physician’s proposed drying regimen in the reported case.

Context: The female pronoun refers to a young noblewoman; the report is not an established treatment or an equation with modern male semen.

Source wording and original alignment: ad exiccandum vero sperma jussit eam quam parcissimè cibari

Modern rendering: To dry up her seed, he ordered her to eat as sparingly as possible

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: Sperma contributes seed; her is supplied from the woman already identified, and the rest describes the reported regimen.

St Vitus’s dance

BAL-0205-V001 · Dancing

Printed “Chorus sancti Viti” (Latin; phrase).

Dance of Saint Vitus: a historical name for reported compulsive dancing.

Here: The account describes prolonged involuntary dancing and visits to the saint for relief; it does not establish a single modern diagnosis.

Context: Burton reports the disorder and Paracelsus’s name; the body’s certain relief is qualified by the original margin’s usually.

Source; Context passages: DJR-022-35

Source wording and original alignment: Chorus sancti Viti, or S. Vitus dance

Modern rendering: Chorus sancti Viti, or St Vitus’s dance

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The Latin name is retained and the English saint’s name expanded.

BAL-0233-V007 · Still

Printed "stillat" (Latin; lemma).

Drips or falls in drops: third-person singular of Latin stillare.

Here: Liquor is the subject liquid; stillat means drips; ut introduces as; ab igne means from fire, with occluso qualifying the enclosed fire. The Latin verb describes dripping and is not an English adverbial form of still.

Context: Unattributed Latin fragment between Burton's English distillation image and its application to Cupid's tears; its source remains untraced.

Source wording and original alignment: ut occluso stillat ab igne liquor

Modern rendering: As liquid drips from a fire enclosed

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The indexed form contributes the defined sense to this complete aligned unit.

Stock; capital

BAL-0274-V001 · Estate

Printed "stock" (English; family).

Capital or the accumulated resources available to spend.

Here: Schenck's reported patient has exhausted his capital in unnecessary building and becomes melancholy.

Context: A historical case story; the preceding cured young man is a separate Montanus and Frigimelica example, and no cure is stated for Schenck's builder.

Source; Context passages: DJR-054-40

Source wording and original alignment: spent his stock

Modern rendering: spent his capital

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Stock supplies capital; spent and his are retained. The word does not specify modern shares or a particular financial instrument.

stupro

BAL-0236-V017 · Adultery

Printed “stupravit” (Latin; lemma).

Had illicit or sexually dishonouring intercourse.

Here: Stupravit is the finite perfect verb; conjugem supplies spouse, rendered wife here. His is supplied from the jailer’s relationship in the story. The verb alone does not establish force.

Context: The original margin summarizes the prisoner’s betrayal of a jailer. A supplied note reports corroboration in a later English adaptation, not fresh collation of Burton’s Greek or Latin intermediary.

Edition page: 630; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N11955

Source wording and original alignment: stupravit conjugem

Modern rendering: had illicit intercourse with his wife

Alignment scope: Equal-scope selected unit in the original marginal quotation and its supplied English note translation

Word and construction: Finite verb plus object aligned to finite phrase plus object; the English possessive his is contextual supply, not a separate word in the selected Latin.

Modern container: note

Printed “stuprârit” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: stupro.

Here: The contracted verb describes illicit intercourse; nuptam specifies a married woman, and the conditional Si quis supplies if someone, rendered if a man.

Context: The marginal law attributed to Alfred prescribes mutilation and differs from Burton’s body death penalty. Its source is uncollated and its Latin agreement irregular; no current legal authority is claimed.

Edition page: 66; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N01084

Source wording and original alignment: Si quis nuptam stuprârit

Modern rendering: If a man has illicit intercourse with a married woman

Alignment scope: Equal-scope selected unit in the original marginal quotation and its supplied English note translation

stuprum

BAL-0236-V018 · Adultery

Printed “stupri” (Latin; lemma).

Sexual dishonouring or violation.

Here: Stupri is genitive after causâ, for the sake or purpose of. The surrounding story’s seizure and threatened drowning explicitly establish coercion.

Context: Burton attributes the attacking Tritons to Pierre Gilles. The adjoining claim about fish wasting for love is conditional on accepting Gomesius’s authority. These are marvellous reports, not verified zoological evidence.

Source wording and original alignment: stupri causâ

Modern rendering: for the purpose of sexual violation

Alignment scope: Equal-scope Latin purpose phrase and its paired English body rendering

Word and construction: Stupri supplies sexual violation; causâ supplies for the purpose of. The surrounding seizure and drowning threat establish coercion.

BAL-0236-V027 · Adultery

Printed “stupris” (Latin; lemma).

Sexual transgressions or illicit sexual acts.

Here: Stupris is ablative plural after de in the wider quotation; inanibus supplies fruitless or empty. Nothing in this fragment itself specifies rape.

Context: Burton attributes the warning against rash vows to Witzel. The Latin sexual warning is harsher and more specific than Burton’s following English lest they repent it; the intermediary source remains uncollated.

Source; Context passages: DJR-142-18

Source wording and original alignment: inanibus stupris

Modern rendering: fruitless sexual transgressions

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The selected noun phrase includes the adjective in both languages; the wider de supplies of after complain and remains outside both selected units.

stylus virum arguit

BAL-0265-V007 · Bewray

Printed “stylus virum arguit” (Latin; phrase).

Stylus means style or manner of writing; virum, the man; arguit, reveals or makes evident: style reveals the man.

Here: Writing makes the author’s character discernible.

Context: Burton applies the maxim to himself and follows it with the separate English claim that style gives writers away; the surrounding observations acknowledge variable judgments.

Source wording and original alignment: stylus virum arguit

Modern rendering: style reveals the man

Word and construction: The three components align as style, the man and reveals; this Latin maxim and Burton’s following English are separate statements in the paired text.

Suaviolum

BAL-0204-V019 · Kissing and embracing

Printed “suaviolum” (Latin; lemma).

Little kiss, a diminutive noun used here as an affectionate name for the beloved.

Here: The lover calls the beloved a little kiss within a catalogue of extravagant pet names; the noun names the person through the pleasing act.

Context: Verses attributed to Marullus addressing Neaera; the precise poem remains unresolved.

Source wording and original alignment: Meum suaviolum

Modern rendering: My little kiss

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Suaviolum contributes little kiss; the possessive adjective meum contributes my. The preceding corculum at DJR-129-76 means little heart and is a separate diminutive.

Uncertainty: Burton’s Epigrams book 1 locator is retained; the precise Marullus poem has not been established.

subrusticus pudor

BAL-0257-V001 · Shame

Printed “subrusticus pudor” (Latin; phrase).

Somewhat rustic or socially awkward shyness: subrusticus means somewhat rustic, pudor shame or bashfulness.

Here: Awkward shyness is one of the feelings that suddenly seize the solitary melancholic person.

Context: Burton describes distress after solitary rumination, but immediately distinguishes profitable meditation and rightly used solitude.

Source wording and original alignment: subrusticus pudor

Modern rendering: awkward shyness

Word and construction: The modern renders the social awkwardness of the whole Latin phrase rather than importing guilt.

Substance; wealth

BAL-0274-V003 · Estate

Printed “substance” (English; family).

Wealth or material possessions.

Here: People would part with possessions and wealth to recover health; Burton contrasts this desire with extreme melancholic suffering.

Context: A rhetorical comparison of suffering, not a universal clinical statement or advice to surrender resources. The ensuing incurability language is rhetorical; the partition ends in charity before the treatment partition.

Source; Context passages: DJR-066-01

New sets of clothes.

Here: Fashionable suitors repeatedly change their clothes.

Context: The attire is part of Burton’s satirical description of lovers’ expense and grooming.

Source; Context passages: DJR-132-19

Source wording and original alignment: with every day new suits

Modern rendering: wearing new suits every day

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: New suits is retained; wearing makes the construction’s clothing action explicit, and every day is moved.

Suiter; divine lover

BAL-0286-V011 · Suit

Printed “suiter” (English; family).

A wooer or lover, here figuratively God.

Here: Moral adornment is promised divine love in an exhortation associated with Tertullian.

Context: The promise is conditional on the advocated sanctity, modesty and chastity; Burton’s Christian marital and moral exhortation is reported as such. His English suiter corresponds to the margin’s divine lover, not a petition for office.

Source; Context passages: DJR-121-42

Source wording and original alignment: they shall have God himself to be a suiter

Modern rendering: they will have God himself as a suitor

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Suiter is retained as suitor in the metaphor; God himself is the pursuing lover. To be and as express the same predicative role.

Suiter; earnest requester

BAL-0286-V010 · Suit

Printed “an earnest suiter” (English; family).

A person making an earnest request.

Here: Branchus asks his mother to reveal his father’s identity.

Context: The myth is attributed to Lactantius without an identified passage. The mother initially refuses because of an oath, yields to importunity and sends him to Apollo, who subsequently honours his beauty; the request itself is familial information, not courtship.

Source wording and original alignment: was an earnest suiter to his mother to know his father

Modern rendering: he begged his mother to tell him who his father was

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The nominal description earnest suiter is recast by begged; the infinitive purpose is expanded to the request that his mother tell him the identity. The modern he represents the previously named Branchus.

Suiter; litigant

BAL-0286-V001 · Suit

Printed “suiters” (English; family).

People pursuing legal cases; litigants.

Here: Ordinary litigants are blamed for destructive contention, alongside lawyers and laws.

Context: Burton says most part, reports rather than counts the cases in one court, and expressly leaves fault divided among lawyers, clients, laws, both or all. Paul and Christ supply the following appeal to reconciliation.

Source wording and original alignment: ordinary suiters

Modern rendering: ordinary litigants

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Ordinary retains ordinary; suiters supplies litigants, not marriage-seekers.

Suiter; religious petitioner

BAL-0286-V016 · Suit

Printed “suters” (English; family).

People making petitions or devotional requests.

Here: Pilgrims and worshippers at saints’ shrines are called petitioners.

Context: The word occurs inside Burton’s anti-Roman polemical catalogue. Its conclusion at DJR-159-44 alleges continuity with other religions; neither the hostile analogy nor the numerical claims independently establish the practices or motives of worshippers.

Source; Context passages: DJR-159-42

Source wording and original alignment: number of suters

Modern rendering: number of petitioners

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Suters supplies petitioners; number of retains the count expression without verifying a count.

Suitor

BAL-0203-V009 · Courtship and wooing

Printed “sutor” (English; family).

A person seeking another’s affection or favour, here an amorous pursuer.

Here: Lucretia’s suitor is deliberately frustrated and shown fictitious evidence of a wealthy rival.

Context: Lucretia’s account as retold by Burton; the count and gifts form a staged deception.

Source wording and original alignment: I had a sutor lov’d me dearly

Modern rendering: I had a suitor who loved me dearly

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Sutor becomes suitor, and who makes the relative connection explicit.

Suitor; applicant

BAL-0286-V008 · Suit

Printed “suitors” (English; family).

Applicants or petitioners for an appointment.

Here: Candidates compete for a vacant cathedral prebend.

Context: Burton introduces a consolatory tale, admits favourable outcomes are rare, and at DJR-096-24 expressly withdraws this generous appointment as pure fiction. These applicants are not spouses.

Source wording and original alignment: many suitors were up in an instant

Modern rendering: many applicants sprang up

Suitor; wooer

BAL-0286-V013 · Suit

Printed “Sutors” (English; family).

People courting a beloved.

Here: The lover’s extravagant grooming leads immediately to new suits of clothes.

Context: Burton generalizes about all suitors in a satirical account; the Heinsius continuation describes a scholar’s supposed loss of study and obsessive grooming.

Source; Context passages: DJR-132-19

Source wording and original alignment: all Sutors

Modern rendering: all suitors

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modernization retains both the universal all and the courting-person noun; the generalization remains Burton’s.

Printed “sutor” (English; lemma).

Citation key: Suitor.

A man seeking marriage.

Here: The Serbian ruler seeks Eudocia, who refuses him despite her brother’s preference.

Context: Burton attributes the narrative to Gregoras, with chronology uncollated; he then condemns the unequal politically motivated marriage to the emperor’s little daughter. The request creates no assured acceptance.

Source wording and original alignment: an earnest sutor to Eudocia

Modern rendering: an eager suitor to Eudocia

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Earnest becomes eager; sutor remains suitor with Eudocia as the person sought.

Superabundance of seed

BAL-0220-V009 · Seed

Printed “superabundance of seed” (English; phrase).

An excessive quantity of generative fluid, as an alleged causal condition.

Here: The phrase limits claims that sexual activity can relieve melancholy: excess seed must actually be the cause, unless another stated exception applies.

Context: Burton urges caution and cites Arnoldus’s objection; the conditional should not be converted into a general endorsement.

Source wording and original alignment: except it be manifest that superabundance of seed, or fulness of blood be a cause

Modern rendering: Unless it is clear that an excess of seed or fullness of blood is a cause

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The indexed form contributes the defined sense to this complete aligned unit.

symptoms of love melancholy

BAL-0201-V013 · Heroical love

Printed “paleness, leanness, driness” (English; phrase).

Pale appearance, thinness and dryness, listed as bodily signs.

Here: The conventional wasted-lover picture combines poetic examples and medical reports; Avicenna’s cited Ilishi account also names hollow eyes and absorbed smiling.

Context: Burton attributes signs to named physicians and quotes poetry; the list is not a modern diagnostic test or an assertion that every lover has all signs.

Source wording and original alignment: paleness, leanness, driness

Modern rendering: paleness, thinness, dryness taken in the fact

BAL-0236-V022 · Adultery

Printed “taken in the fact” (English; phrase).

Detected while doing the deed.

Here: Fact means deed or act, not a piece of verified information. The larger clause says such detection is unlikely, while the wrongdoing cannot evidently be proved.

Context: Burton’s counsel about divorce distinguishes alleged notoriety from proof, though his illustrative use of Sulpitia is problematic: the supplied note identifies Sulpicia and Calenus as spouses in Martial.

Source wording and original alignment: taken in the fact

Modern rendering: caught in the act

Tax

BAL-0287-V001 · Tax

Printed “taxeth” (English; lemma).

Reproaches or censures; third-person singular verb.

Here: Erasmus is said to reproach scholars for neglecting patrons or choosing them badly.

Context: Burton endorses the reproach and admits his own fault, then condemns the opposite excess of importunity before returning chief responsibility to harsh patrons at DJR-049-05. The printed Erasmus citation does not establish the borrowing.

Source wording and original alignment: as Erasmus well taxeth

Modern rendering: as Erasmus justly reproaches them

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Taxeth supplies reproaches; well supplies justly. Them is an explicit modern object supplied from the university scholars in the surrounding sentence.

Tax

BAL-0287-V002 · Tax

Printed “taxe” (English; lemma).

Attack or censure in satire.

Here: Princes reportedly pay Aretino so he will not attack their conduct.

Context: Burton qualifies the pension story as some relate; the precise Barth preface remains uncollated. The money is the means allegedly used to avoid satire, not a levy imposed by the word taxe.

Source; Context passages: DJR-051-27

Source wording and original alignment: taxe them in his Satyres

Modern rendering: attack them in his satires

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Taxe supplies attack, them names the rulers, and in his Satyres identifies the medium; the negative should not stands outside this retained selected unit and is preserved in the context.

Tax

BAL-0287-V003 · Tax

Printed “tax” (English; lemma).

Censure or rebuke.

Here: Burton declares that discussing lust should expose it, discourage others and apply remedies.

Context: This is his avowed defensive purpose, not proof of every reader’s response. He denies teaching lust, not teaching its remedies; the original margin expressly includes teaching remedies.

Source; Context passages: DJR-108-16

Source wording and original alignment: to tax and deter others from it

Modern rendering: to censure it and deter others from it

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Tax supplies censure. The first it is an explicit modern object supplied from lust; others is the object of deter, not a person censured by tax. The remaining deterrence construction is retained.

Tax satirically

BAL-0287-V010 · Tax

Printed “taxe satyrically” (English; phrase).

Criticize or censure in a satirical manner.

Here: Discontented sufferers are described as railing at the world.

Context: Burton’s historical symptom account attributes criticism to frustrated emotion and qualifies perceived wrong with as they mean. Its eventual self-destructive outcome is not a necessary course of mental illness or a modern diagnostic claim.

Source wording and original alignment: taxe satyrically

Modern rendering: criticize satirically

Tax someone of a fault

BAL-0287-V011 · Tax

Printed “taxeth” (English; phrase).

Accuses or reproaches someone for a fault.

Here: Crato charges melancholy patients with changing physicians when immediate relief fails.

Context: The universal all is Crato’s reported accusation, not an adopted judgment of patients. The continuation demands prolonged perseverance and then warns against copying recipes because one person’s remedy may harm another; all are historical medical counsels.

Source; Context passages: DJR-069-35

Source wording and original alignment: taxeth all melancholy persons of this fault

Modern rendering: accuses all melancholy people of this fault

Temporibus servire

BAL-0288-V010 · Temporize

Printed “Temporibus servi” (Latin; phrase).

Serve or accommodate yourself to the times: temporibus is dative plural, governed by servi, a singular imperative of servire.

Here: The margin advises adjustment to circumstances and not opposing the winds.

Context: The imperative sits among pragmatic maxims, including the Cretan proverb, beside the body’s injunction to keep upright. Its source is not precisely identified; it is not an unqualified endorsement of the politically expedient hypocrisy condemned elsewhere.

Source wording and original alignment: Temporibus servi, nec contra flamina flato

Modern rendering: Accommodate yourself to the times, and do not blow against the winds

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Servi supplies accommodate yourself, an idiomatic rendering of serve, with temporibus to the times. Nec gives and do not; contra flamina is against the winds and flato the second imperative blow.

Temporiser

BAL-0288-V002 · Temporize

Printed “temporisers” (English; lemma).

People who change their outward allegiance or conduct opportunistically.

Here: Conformists are accused of accepting whatever is proposed in hope of advancement.

Context: Burton’s religious polemic contrasts these people with another extreme of scrupulous refusal and with seekers of Church property. Fear and flattery as well as promotion are attributed motives; the passage does not prove all conformists’ private beliefs.

Source wording and original alignment: a rout of temporisers

Modern rendering: a gang of opportunists

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Rout supplies gang; temporisers supplies opportunists. The noun names people, not merely delay in making a decision.

Temporising

BAL-0288-V006 · Temporize

Printed “temporising” (English; lemma).

Opportunistically accommodating; an adjective describing the age.

Here: The age’s conduct makes flattering companions hard to expose.

Context: The Gnathos generally attach themselves to great men, gain honours and offices, and often ruin themselves and others. Burton contrasts their false appearances with genuine honourable love, which cannot deceive or be compelled. The Caelius Secundus anecdote remains unidentified.

Temporize

BAL-0288-V001 · Temporize

Printed “temporize” (English; lemma).

Adjust one’s conduct to prevailing circumstances, especially for advantage.

Here: Conscientious people refuse the opportunistic behaviour that society rewards as wisdom.

Context: The cannot or will not of the surrounding sentence includes inability and refusal. Burton’s catalogue is ironic; the following paragraph reverses worldly judgment and calls the successful worldly people foolish.

The mother

BAL-0218-V002 · Matrix and mother

Printed “the mother” (English; phrase).

The mother names a historical disorder attributed to the womb.

Here: It is the female comparator for the frequency of hypochondriacal melancholy among men.

Context: Burton attributes the comparison to Melanchthon; the grammatical comparison does not give men wombs or call their disorder the mother.

Source wording and original alignment: as common to men, as the mother to women

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Town-clerk contributes town clerk; some say carries the original attribution as some will, moved to the beginning of the clause.

Context passages: DJR-001-08, DJR-001-10

Further local use

Printed “Town-Clarks” (English; phrase).

Citation key: Town clerk.

Civic officers for whom rhetorical skill serves their public work.

Here: Town clerks’ rhetoric is one occupational study that idle gentlemen leave to people they regard as beneath them.

Context: The dismissal of learning belongs to the reported reasoning of those gentlemen; Burton rebukes it.

Source; Context passages: DJR-048-35

Source wording and original alignment: Town-Clarks Rhetorick

Modern rendering: town clerks rhetoric

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modern retains the two nouns in the list, with learn understood from the preceding items.

Sense relation: A further local attestation of the parent sense; its form, agency and construction are separately specified.

Printed “Town-clark” (English; phrase).

Citation key: Town clerk.

A civic officer acting as a public spokesman.

Here: A mayor speaks through the town clerk or Recorder when unable to express himself, illustrating the rich man’s reliance on intermediaries.

Context: Burton’s consolation of poverty, contrasting self-sufficiency with dependence; he does not claim every mayor is inarticulate.

Source wording and original alignment: speaks by the Town-clark, or by Mr Recorder

Modern rendering: speaks through the town clerk or the Recorder

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: By contributes through; Town-clark and Recorder supply the officers. The modern drops the courtesy title Mr.

Sense relation: A further local attestation of the parent sense; its form, agency and construction are separately specified.

Town clerk as bodily spokesman

BAL-0268-V004 · Clerk

Printed “Town-Clark” (English; phrase).

A town clerk or public crier, used figuratively for an organ that gives voice.

Here: The lungs are pictured as the heart’s spokesman, like an orator attached to a king.

Context: Burton reports the town-clerk/crier designation from an unnamed writer; the related orator comparison is attributed to Melanchthon in the margin.

Source; Context passages: DJR-024-16

Source wording and original alignment: the Town-Clark, or Cryer

Modern rendering: the town clerk or crier

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The two civic descriptions are retained as a metaphor; neither describes a literal office held by the lungs.

Qualification: The account of voice, air and cooling belongs to historical physiology, not modern anatomical instruction.

triste divortium

BAL-0234-V046 · Marriage

Printed “triste divortium” (Latin; phrase).

A sorrowful separation or parting.

Here: Triste means sorrowful and divortium parting; here death separates a person from possessions, pleasures and friends, not one spouse from another.

Context: Burton describes fear of death and the distress of leaving familiar goods. This figurative breadth prevents every divortium from being indexed as a legal divorce.

Source wording and original alignment: triste divortium

Modern rendering: a sorrowful parting

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The indexed form contributes the defined sense to this complete aligned unit.

Context passages: DJR-055-10, DJR-055-12

tristitia de bonis alienis

BAL-0246-V002 · Envy, malice and hatred

Printed “Tristitia de bonis alienis” (Latin; phrase).

Tristitia means sorrow; de marks its occasion; bonis alienis means the goods or blessings of others.

Here: Sorrow is provoked by another person’s good fortune.

Context: This is Burton’s Latin definitional phrase, followed by a separate English gloss and a list of attributed parallels.

Source wording and original alignment: Tristitia de bonis alienis

Modern rendering: sorrow at another’s good fortune

Word and construction: The complete Latin phrase matches the complete new translation; another’s is alienis, and good fortune renders bonis.

tuition

BAL-0242-V013 · Parents and children

Printed “tuition” (English; lemma).

Care, protection or charge of another person.

Here: Tuition means care here, alongside oversight as supervision; it does not name a fee charged for lessons.

Context: Burton calls for moderation after describing threats and physical punishment as potentially lifelong harms.

Edition page: 148 [sequence; printed 144]; Source layer: original body; Page label type: sequence label with printed qualification.

turning pictures

BAL-0262-V003 · Ambodexter

Printed “turning pictures” (English; phrase).

Pictures whose appearance changes with the angle of view; turning marks the change of viewpoint, pictures the visible images.

Here: One person displays a lion from one side and a lamb from the other.

Context: Burton’s comparison of opposed outward faces; the exact optical device, if any, is unspecified. The original margins extend the analogy through Curius/Bacchic revelry and hybrid creatures.

Source; Context passages: DJR-010-28

Source wording and original alignment: so many turning pictures, a lyon on the one side, a lamb on the other

Modern rendering: so many pictures that change as you turn them: a lion on one side, a lamb on the other Word and construction: The full comparison preserves both contrasted animals and their sides; the adjective is unfolded as a relative clause.

Printed “double or turning pictures” (English; phrase).

Citation key: turning pictures.

Here: Changing pictures illustrate mixed virtue and fault, without necessarily implying deliberate deception.

Context: Burton judges historical figures whose merits and vices coexist; the girl, ape and owl are alternative views of the same image.

Source wording and original alignment: these double or turning pictures

Modern rendering: those changing pictures

Word and construction: Double or turning jointly becomes changing; the following front and side views explain the change. The demonstrative shifts idiomatically from these to those.

tutor

BAL-0242-V012 · Parents and children

Printed “Tutors” (English; lemma).

People charged with a young person’s instruction or upbringing.

Here: The overlapping titles describe those who can shape a child’s education; the printed list does not give an exclusive legal definition of each office.

Context: Pratensis and Burton blame both excessive severity and excessive indulgence, within the historical account of melancholy.

Source; Context passages: DJR-050-39

two loves

BAL-0200-V007 · Love

Printed “both are good in their own natures” (English; phrase).

Both the contemplative and the generative forms of love are naturally good within the reported account.

Here: The love initially called lower and bad is condemned for misuse and distraction from contemplation, not because procreation is intrinsically bad.

Context: Burton expressly closes this passage with So far Ficinus, attributing the account to Ficino.

Source and modern wording: both are good in their own natures

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Both has the two previously distinguished loves as its subject; in their own natures is essential to the qualification.

ulciscor

BAL-0256-V005 · Revenge

Printed “ultus” (Latin; lemma).

Avenge oneself or take revenge; ultus forms the perfect expression with fuero.

Here: The first vow threatens revenge on the other brother.

Context: The second vow promises to make the first speaker love him; the original marginal Latin leaves the names unstated.

Source; Context passages: DJR-096-33

Edition page: 353; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N07217

Source wording and original alignment: Dispeream nisi te ultus fuero

Modern rendering: May I perish unless I take revenge on you

Word and construction: Dispeream supplies may I perish, nisi unless, te on you, and ultus fuero the completed revenge contemplated by the vow.

Printed “ulcisci” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: ulciscor.

Here: The infinitive supplies the action desired by even a small animal.

Context: This margin says desire revenge, where Burton’s body says will be revenged; desire is not silently converted into achievement.

Edition page: 355; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N07271

Source wording and original alignment: quod non cupiat ulcisci

Modern rendering: that it does not desire revenge

Word and construction: Cupiat supplies desire, ulcisci revenge or to take revenge; quod and non supply the relation and negation.

Modern container: note

Sense relation: The same verb occurs as the object of desire, with a narrower modality than the body.

Printed “ulcisci” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: ulciscor.

Here: A person’s punishment of an enemy is compared with God’s treatment of oppressors.

Context: Burton attributes the maxim to Plato without a verified locus. The margin’s customarily differs from the body’s will.

Source; Context passages: DJR-096-48

Edition page: 354; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N07247

Source wording and original alignment: inimicum suum ulcisci

Modern rendering: take such severe vengeance on his enemy

Alignment scope: phrase with degree supplied from earlier tam severè in the wider comparison

Word and construction: Inimicum suum supplies his enemy; ulcisci take vengeance. Such severe is supplied from tam severè earlier in the full comparison.

Modern container: note

Sense relation: The same retaliatory verb occurs under a comparison of human and divine power.

Context passages: DJR-096-47, DJR-096-49

ultio

BAL-0256-V013 · Revenge

Printed “ultio” (Latin; lemma).

Vengeance, requital or punishment; here conscience’s inward punishment.

Here: The guilty person cannot acquit himself, even after avoiding worldly justice.

Context: The adapted Juvenal quotation belongs to an account of conscience that follows earlier pleasure and worldly success; it does not claim distress is continuous from the first wrongdoing.

Edition page: 699; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N12980

Printed “ultionem” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: ultio.

Here: Charles is described as bent on revenge.

Context: The attributed margin differs from the body in its concise account of food, rest and killing companions; its printed July 1392 date is retained with the supplied historical discrepancy.

Edition page: 104–105; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N02972

Source wording and original alignment: in ultionem versus

Modern rendering: bent on revenge

Word and construction: Versus supplies bent or turned, in towards/on, and ultionem revenge.

Modern container: note

Sense relation: The same noun denotes intended retaliation rather than conscience’s internal punishment.

ultor

BAL-0256-V014 · Revenge

Printed “ultor” (Latin; lemma).

An avenger or agent of retribution.

Here: God is imagined pursuing from behind in vengeance, felt by a guilty soul.

Context: The classical phrase is placed beside the biblical avenger; the margin’s Psalm 44:1 differs from the supplied Psalm 94:1 comparison. This is Burton’s theological and poetic account of experienced wrath.

Source wording and original alignment: ultor a tergo Deus

Modern rendering: God pursuing from behind in vengeance

Word and construction: Deus means God, ultor avenger, and a tergo from behind; pursuing is supplied to unfold the image, not a separate Latin verb.

Context passages: DJR-165-08, DJR-165-10

Alignment conventions: A1.

Alignment conventions: A1.

Further local use

Printed “ultori” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: ultor.

Here: The stranger is the special concern of God the avenger.

Context: Burton invokes Plato’s protection of strangers to console forced exiles; the avenging role is protective, not an accusation that the stranger is guilty.

Source wording and original alignment: ultori Deo summa cura peregrinus est

Modern rendering: The stranger is the particular concern of God the avenger

Word and construction: Peregrinus is the stranger, summa cura the particular concern, est is, and ultori Deo God the avenger as the person concerned. The dative construction is recast as of in English.

Sense relation: Divine retribution grounds care for the vulnerable stranger.

unless help is given

BAL-0201-V018 · Heroical love

Printed “nisi succurratur” (Latin; phrase).

Unless help is given.

Here: The condition limits the dire prognosis of wasting, madness and death attributed to medical authorities.

Context: Burton reports Arnald and Valescus, retaining the explicit condition of prompt help; the following treatment section answers claims of incurability.

Source wording and original alignment: nisi succurratur

Modern rendering: unless help is given

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Nisi supplies unless; succurratur is an impersonal passive subjunctive expressing assistance being given.

Qualification: The prognosis belongs to historical medical argument; its predicted outcomes are not present-day clinical findings.

unmarried people after divorce

BAL-0234-V045 · Marriage

Printed “innumeras propemodum viduas haberemus, et cælibes viros” (Latin; family).

We would have almost innumerable women without husbands and unmarried men.

Here: Viduas can mean women without husbands, including divorced women here, rather than only bereaved widows; cælibes viros names unmarried men. Haberemus expresses the hypothetical we would have, and propemodum qualifies innumeras with almost.

Context: This is Filesac’s reported counterfactual about using unspecified imperial divorce laws in Burton’s time. It is not a count of actual divorce or a verified statement of the laws’ effects.

Source wording and original alignment: innumeras propemodum viduas haberemus, et cælibes viros

Usura

BAL-0289-V005 · Usury

Printed “usuram” (Latin; lemma).

Interest on a loan; accusative singular of usura.

Here: The original margin attributes qualified approval of approximately this form of interest to Zanchi.

Context: The note retains conditions and ellipses: not everyone lends, not everyone borrows, and the permitted use is honest. Printed modo non exigant is rendered provided they do not exact it, with its precise scope unresolved beyond the incomplete quotation.

Edition page: 67; Source layer: original marginal quotation.

Note; Modern note: N01108

Source wording and original alignment: Hoc fere Zanchius com. in 4 cap. ad Ephes. æquissimam vocat usuram, & charitati Christianæ consentaneam

Modern rendering: Zanchi, commentary on Ephesians chapter 4, calls approximately this form of interest entirely just and consistent with Christian charity

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Hoc fere contributes approximately this form; usuram interest is the accusative with vocat, calls, and æquissimam/consentaneam describe it as entirely just/consistent. Charitati Christianæ is dative, with Christian charity.

At interest; ad with accusative fœnus within the lending construction.

Here: Zanchi’s reported restriction allows only certain people to lend.

Context: The negative is not everyone, not an absolute refusal of all lending. The modern leaves at interest implicit in this local clause because interest has just been named.

Usurer

BAL-0289-V004 · Usury

Printed “Usurer” (English; lemma).

A person who lends money at interest.

Here: The noun can name an approved lender rather than necessarily an extortioner.

Context: The no/not…every construction restricts who may lend; it does not forbid the practice altogether. The modern changes a lender noun phrase into a verb phrase within the whole prohibition.

Source; Context passages: DJR-017-11

Source wording and original alignment: it shall not be lawful for each man to be an Usurer that will

Modern rendering: not everyone who wishes shall be allowed to lend at interest

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The noun Usurer contributes lend at interest when to be an Usurer is recast verbally. Each man…that will becomes everyone who wishes, with the negative permission preserved.

Usury

BAL-0289-V001 · Usury

Printed “usury” (English; lemma).

Lending money at interest; not necessarily an excessive charge in this use.

Here: Burton’s imagined commonwealth tolerates a limited kind of interest-taking while rejecting extortionate lenders.

Context: The allowance is a concession to human imperfection, unnecessary if people were upright. The sequel reports theologians’ disagreement, then restricts lenders, borrowers, bank arrangements and rates. It is Burton’s historical proposal, not a modern rule or financial recommendation.

Usury; toleration analogy

BAL-0289-V013 · Usury

Printed “usury” (English; family).

Interest-taking invoked as a politically tolerated practice despite religious objection.

Here: Burton compares a claimed toleration of brothels with toleration of usury because of human hardness of heart.

Context: The account is attributed polemic against Roman Catholics, not independently established doctrine or civic practice. At DJR-149-52 Burton expressly concedes the force of the policy argument while opposing the practice in religion; the two judgments remain distinct.

Printed “uteri labiorum” (Latin; phrase).

Uteri means of the womb, labiorum of the lips; the whole genitive phrase qualifies constriction.

Here: The expression points locally to the genital opening in imprecise historical anatomy, not precisely to the modern anatomical uterus.

Context: Burton reports Boncialus’s objection to an alleged virginity test; they claim marks the theory under challenge, and the subsequent accusation of deception remains his reported claim.

voluntary servant

BAL-0241-V023 · Liberty and servitude

Printed “voluntary servants” (English; phrase).

People who willingly place themselves in another’s service.

Here: Voluntary qualifies servants; the lover’s willing submission is described through captivity imagery. It can coexist rhetorically with his later inability to escape desire.

Context: Burton uses Castiglione’s courtly dialogue and Xenophon’s Cyrus to characterize erotic dependence. The literal suffering of enslaved workers elsewhere is not reduced to this metaphor.

votivus

BAL-0235-V022 · Celibacy and vows

Printed “votivi” (Latin; lemma).

Promised or performed in fulfilment of a religious vow.

Here: Votivi qualifies ludi, games. The supplied note translates the coordinated list with games at the end, so Votive alone is the adjective’s counterpart, not an equal-scope rendering of Ludi votivi.

Context: The marginal catalogue concerns public Roman spectacles, a civic religious vow-context distinct from celibacy. Its Rosinus and other detailed references remain uncollated.

Printed “Votoque” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: votum.

Here: Voto is dative of votum, the wish or vow opposed; -que supplies and, suo her own for that vow, sua her own for forma, beauty, and repugnat conflicts with.

Context: Ovid’s Daphne wishes for perpetual virginity. Burton changes second-person pronouns to third-person feminine and applies the line to male religious vows; her remains feminine in the modern.

Source; Context passages: DJR-142-10

Source wording and original alignment: Votoque suo sua forma repugnat

Modern rendering: And her own beauty conflicts with her vow

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: The English retains the feminine possessives and gives vow for Daphne’s wish for virginity; the male monastic application is Burton’s transfer, not the quoted subject.

weed of Covetousness

BAL-0245-V006 · Covetousness

Printed “weed of Covetousness” (English; phrase).

Context: A letter attributed to Hippocrates advises Crateuas conditionally: if removal were possible and no root remained, bodily and mental cure would follow. This belongs to the literary letter tradition.

Source wording and original alignment: that weed of Covetousness by the roots

Modern rendering: the weed of covetousness by the roots

Word and construction: The same metaphor is preserved; covetousness names the figurative plant.

Qualification: The supplied edition does not treat the letter as authenticated correspondence of the historical Hippocrates.

whether love is a disease

BAL-0201-V009 · Heroical love

Printed “An amor sit morbus” (Latin; phrase).

Whether love is a disease.

Here: The interrogative introduces disagreement over literal disease, body and mind, and classification as melancholy.

Context: Burton attributes the question to Charles de Lorme, then juxtaposes answers from Pollux, Arnald and other authorities.

Source wording and original alignment: An amor sit morbus

Modern rendering: whether love is a disease

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: An introduces whether; amor is the subject love; sit supplies is in an indirect question; morbus is the predicate disease.

Grammar: Indirect question with present subjunctive sit; it is not the assertion love is a disease.

BAL-0243-V016 · Wittal and cuckold

Printed “wink at” (English; phrase).

To deliberately overlook or pretend not to notice.

Here: Wink at concerns deliberate inattention; honesty here means sexual fidelity or chastity. The contrast with sharp sight in other matters makes the choice explicit.

Context: Burton’s satirical example is reinforced by Juvenal’s man who looks at the ceiling for profit; it is not an ordinary involuntary blink.

wittal

BAL-0243-V001 · Wittal and cuckold

Printed “wittal” (English; lemma).

A husband who knows of and tolerates his wife’s infidelity.

Here: Willing explains the knowing tolerance added by wittal to cuckold. The ensuing contrast is between deliberately overlooking sexual infidelity and being sharply observant in other affairs.

Context: Burton’s satirical catalogue exposes selective judgment. The Juvenal margin depicts a man profiting by looking away; this is a literary example, not evidence against an identified spouse.

Woed and woe; redirected wooing

BAL-0203-V018 · Courtship and wooing

Printed “woed, or woe” (English; family).

Woed is the past participle courted; woe is the active infinitive woo or court.

Here: Helpers are to arrange either for the sufferer to receive courtship or for the sufferer to pursue another person, redirecting existing attachment.

Context: Burton’s historical proposed cure after disparaging the former beloved. Jason Pratensis recommends redirection, Valesius division; the literary examples do not establish efficacy.

Source wording and original alignment: set him or her to be woed, or woe some other

Modern rendering: Arrange for him or her to be courted, or to court someone

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Set becomes arrange for. Him or her is the person whose situation helpers arrange; to be woed is passive, while woe some other is active with another person as object. The two alternatives must not both become the sufferer initiating courtship.

Qualification: The preceding Latin alteram inducere means introduce another woman: alteram is feminine accusative singular, with woman understood, and inducere is introduce. Burton’s following English includes him or her. The subsequent division of affection among several and likely change after seeing alternatives are proposed strategies, not proof. Burton’s Lucian example differs from the source, and his Jerome excerpt omits the source’s opposition between replacing a fault and overcoming it through virtue.

Context: A pastoral speaker describing his mistress, not a rule that retreat or refusal always conceals willingness.

Source wording and original alignment: My Mistress with an apple wooes me

Modern rendering: My mistress woos me with an apple

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: The modern word order preserves the mistress as agent, speaker as object, apple as means.

worshipful

BAL-0259-V021 · Honour and nobility

Printed “worshipful” (English; lemma).

Of respectable or honourable social standing.

Here: Burton describes his own parents’ standing in an ancient family while identifying himself as a younger brother.

Context: This is his self-positioning after the satire, not a claim that the parents are objects of religious worship.

Source; Context passages: DJR-089-10

Source wording and original alignment: worshipful parents

Modern rendering: parents of good standing

Word and construction: The adjective is expanded to of good standing.

Context passages: DJR-089-11, DJR-089-12, DJR-089-13

Alignment conventions: A1.

Further local use

Printed “worshipful” (English; lemma).

Citation key: worshipful.

Here: Titles alone are said to distinguish the unlearned master from his servant.

Context: The surrounding qualifications acknowledge learned and deserving gentlemen.

Source; Context passages: DJR-049-18

Source wording and original alignment: worshipful titles

Modern rendering: honourable titles

Word and construction: Worshipful becomes honourable in the social, not religious, sense.

writings as children

BAL-0242-V049 · Parents and children

Printed “παῖδας ἐγὼ λόγους ἐγεννησάμην” (Greek; family).

I have begotten writings as children.

Here: Παῖδας means children, λόγους writings or discourses, ἐγὼ I, and ἐγεννησάμην I begot/have begotten. As clarifies the relation between the two accusatives; my is supplied from the first-person begetting.

Context: Compare Synesius’s Letter 1 to Nicander; the source package normalizes Greek ligatures and accents and leaves fine typographical collation open.

Source; Context passages: DJR-138-17

Source wording and original alignment: παῖδας ἐγὼ λόγους ἐγεννησάμην

Modern rendering: I have begotten writings as my children

Alignment scope: Complete Greek sentence with explicit relational and possessive supplies

Word and construction: The complete Greek sentence is translated with as and my supplied to express the predicative offspring relation and first-person possession.

Context passages: DJR-138-14, DJR-138-15, DJR-138-16, DJR-138-18

Yield to the time

BAL-0288-V009 · Temporize

Printed “yield to the time” (English; phrase).

Accommodate oneself to prevailing circumstances.

Here: A practical maxim recommends yielding and following the stream.

Context: The surrounding collection forbids selling the soul for gain and immediately directs innocent, upright living. The juxtaposition permits prudence without resolving all tension with the harsher satirical condemnations.

Source wording and original alignment: yield to the time, follow the stream

Modern rendering: Yield to the times; follow the current

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase or construction in the supplied parallel text.

Word and construction: Yield is retained, time becomes times, and stream becomes current; the paired imperatives express adaptive conduct rather than postponement.

Context passages: DJR-098-20, DJR-098-21, DJR-098-23, DJR-098-24

æmulatio

BAL-0249-V005 · Emulation

Printed “Æmulatio” (Latin; lemma).

Rivalry or emulation.

Here: The marginal maxim says rivalry nourishes intellects.

Context: Burton attributes the maxim to Paterculus; the supplied editorial comparison reports a different word order and division.

Note; Modern note: N02942

Source wording and original alignment: Æmulatio alit ingenia

Modern rendering: Rivalry nourishes intellects.

Word and construction: Æmulatio is rivalry; alit is nourishes; ingenia is intellects.

Modern container: note

Uncertainty: Burton’s latter-volume locator differs from Roman History 1.17.6 in the supplied comparison; his edition is unidentified.

Context passages: DJR-041-20, DJR-041-21

Alignment conventions: A1.

æmulatio

BAL-0249-V010 · Emulation

Printed “æmulatio” (Latin; lemma).

Envy or resentful rivalry.

Here: The psalmist’s envy burns at the prosperity of fools.

Context: The body cites Psalm 37; the supplied marginal comparison identifies Psalm 73:3. The surrounding examples include subsequent self-correction.

Note; Modern note: N02918

Source wording and original alignment: Urebat me æmulatio propter stultos.

Modern rendering: Envy burned within me because of fools.

Word and construction: Æmulatio supplies envy, not approved emulation; the remaining clause supplies the burning image and its occasion.

Modern container: note

Context passages: DJR-041-08, DJR-041-10

Alignment conventions: A1.

æmulor

BAL-0249-V006 · Emulation

Printed “æmulari” (Latin; lemma).

To imitate or follow another’s example.

Here: The object is another people’s diet, not competition for precedence.

Context: Burton reports a source’s claim about differing dietary custom, with an extreme poisonous-food comparison; this is historical physiology, not current dietary advice.

Source wording and original alignment: si quis illorum victum apud nos æmulari vellet

Modern rendering: if anyone among us wished to imitate their diet

Word and construction: The full clause keeps the conditional wish and the diet as the object of imitation.

Context passages: DJR-035-42, DJR-035-44

Alignment conventions: A1.

Further local use

Printed “æmulantur” (Latin; lemma).

Citation key: æmulor.

Here: People imitate the sound of lowing oxen.

Context: The symptoms account separately says that they think themselves cattle; it does not assert a bodily transformation into animals.

Note; Modern note: N04565

Source wording and original alignment: Quidam mugitus boum æmulantur

Modern rendering: Some imitate the lowing of oxen

Word and construction: Æmulantur supplies imitate; mugitus boum is the sound imitated, while Quidam identifies some people.

Modern container: note

Sense relation: Ordinary imitation concerns an animal sound, not rivalry for rank or an actual transformation.

Context passages: DJR-060-29, DJR-060-31

Alignment conventions: A1.

æmulor

BAL-0249-V008 · Emulation

Printed “æmulandum” (Latin; lemma).

To match or imitate in competitive response.

Here: The reported Thero challenges a rival to repeat his self-injuring deed.

Context: This is Burton’s historical anecdote within extravagant lovers’ behaviour; the supplied Plutarch comparison says cut off with a sword where Burton says bit off.

Source wording and original alignment: provocans rivalem ad hoc æmulandum

Modern rendering: challenging his rival to match the deed

Alignment scope: construction with his supplied and hoc (this) expanded as the deed

Word and construction: The construction preserves the challenger, rival and deed to be matched; his is a supplied possessive, while hoc literally means this and points to the preceding deed.

Uncertainty: The Latin intermediary is uncollated; Burton’s version differs from the supplied Plutarch comparison.

Context passages: DJR-130-40, DJR-130-42

æquabile jus

BAL-0294-V015 · Law and justice

Printed “æquabile jus” (Latin; phrase).

Equal or impartial justice: æquabile means even or equitable, and jus law, right or justice.

Here: The governing standard opposed to official predation and corruption.

Context: The ideal preserves distinctions of rank while demanding impartial treatment.

Source wording and original alignment: æquabile jus

Modern rendering: equal justice

Word and construction: Æquabile supplies equal and jus justice; the separate English justice equally done is a second formulation, not part of this Latin phrase.

Context passages: DJR-016-28, DJR-016-29, DJR-016-30, DJR-016-31, DJR-016-32, DJR-016-33, DJR-016-34, DJR-016-35, DJR-016-37, DJR-016-38, DJR-016-39, DJR-016-40, DJR-016-41, DJR-016-42, DJR-016-43

κακοζηλία

BAL-0249-V001 · Emulation

Printed “κακοζηλίαν” (Greek; lemma).

Misguided or perverse imitation or emulation.

Here: A chain of favourites and flatterers exposes servile ambition.

Context: Burton satirizes the expenditure of strength, time and fortune to acquire dependent favour and then despise the servile world.

Source wording and original alignment: κακοζηλίαν

Modern rendering: misguided imitation

Word and construction: The printed accusative κακοζηλίαν is rendered by the two-word English phrase; the lemma is κακοζηλία.

Context passages: DJR-011-06, DJR-011-08

Alignment conventions: A1.

πενία

BAL-0258-V012 · Poverty and riches

Printed “πενίας” (Greek; lemma).

Greek πενία means poverty; πενίας is the genitive form, here in a comparison meaning than poverty.

Here: The maxim says no burden is heavier than poverty. Burton’s separate English intensifies this to intolerable.

Context: Attributed to Menander, exact textual source uncollated; the account is twice framed as worldly estimation and followed by a Christian reversal.

Source; Context passages: DJR-089-29

Source wording and original alignment: οὐδὲν πενίας βαρύτερόν ἐστι φορτίον

Modern rendering: No burden is heavier than poverty

Word and construction: The indexed form occurs within this exactly matched original and modern unit.

Context passages: DJR-089-30, DJR-089-31, DJR-089-32, DJR-089-33, DJR-089-34, DJR-089-35

Alignment conventions: A1.

Further local use

Printed “πενία” (Greek; lemma).

Citation key: πενία.

Here: Poverty, the subject of produces in the Greek political maxim.

Context: Burton’s chain begins with corrupt rulers’ example; the following aphorism speaks of poor and wicked, not every poor person without qualification.

Source wording and original alignment: ἡ πενία στάσιν ἐμποιεῖ καὶ κακουργίαν

Modern rendering: Poverty produces civil strife and wrongdoing

Word and construction: Complete Greek clause; στάσιν means civil strife and κακουργίαν wrongdoing; Burton’s separate English says sedition and villany.

Context passages: DJR-013-21, DJR-013-23

Alignment conventions: A1.

συζυγία

BAL-0234-V012 · Marriage

Printed “συζυγία” (Greek, followed by a Latin causal phrase; lemma).

Marriage or a union under a yoke.

Here: The Greek noun names marriage; Latin ob gives the causal through, and Xantipismum names behaviour associated with the stereotypically quarrelsome Xanthippe.

Context: Scheraeus is quoted as complaining that his marriage obstructed his work. Burton’s subsequent a shrew to my wife is his separate explanatory restatement; the bibliographical reference is uncollated.

Source; Context passages: DJR-139-44

Source wording and original alignment: συζυγία ob Xantipismum

Modern rendering: marriage, through Xanthippe-like behaviour

Alignment scope: Equal-scope phrase/construction in the paired body texts

Word and construction: συζυγία supplies marriage alone; ob Xantipismum supplies through Xanthippe-like behaviour. The quotation does not make shrewishness part of marriage’s lexical meaning.

φιλαργυρία

BAL-0245-V002 · Covetousness

Printed “φιλαργυρία” (Greek; lemma).

Love of money or avarice.

Here: The Greek heading specifies the monetary passion treated as a cause of melancholy.

Context: Burton’s subsection title couples the Greek noun with Covetousnesse.

Source wording and original alignment: φιλαργυρία

Modern rendering: Love of money

Word and construction: The complete Greek noun is rendered as the three-word English expression.

Citation form: The printed Greek spelling in the supplied original column is retained; the edition reports regularized letterforms and accent placement.

Context passages: DJR-043-33, DJR-043-34

ἐντελέχεια

B3C-0056-V001 · Actuality · BAL-0056

Printed “ἐντελέχεια” (Greek; lemma).

Actuality or fulfilment.

Here: The Greek begins the definition of soul repeated in Latin and English.

Context: Burton reports Aristotle and majority philosophical approval, then records unresolved questions.

Source wording and original alignment: ἐντελέχεια, perfectio & actus primus corporis Organici, vitam habentis in potentia: the perfection or first act of an Organical body, having power of life

Modern rendering: the fulfilment or first actuality of an organized body with the capacity for life

Continuation id: B3C-0056

Alignment scope: equal-scope phrase or construction unless qualified below

Word and construction: The modern combines the Greek term, Latin construction and English restatement; fulfilment/actuality supplies the shared concept.

Alignment qualification: This is a consolidated rendering of repeated original formulations, not an equal-length component translation of ἐντελέχεια alone.

Context passages: DJR-024-20, DJR-024-22

ἐπιχαιρεκακία (epichairekakia)

BAL-0246-V004 · Envy, malice and hatred

Printed “ἐπιχαιρεκακία” (Greek; lemma).

Delight in another person’s misfortune; malicious joy.

Here: The Greek word directly names pleasure in harm; Burton further describes a compound of joy and hatred, adding grief at others’ prosperity.

Context: Burton places the term among mixed affections alongside anger, hatred and zeal; his added converse is preserved without being inserted into the literal Greek definition.

Source wording and original alignment: ἐπιχαιρεκακία

Modern rendering: malicious joy

Word and construction: The Greek noun is rendered by the complete English expression malicious joy.

Wider original wording: ἐπιχαιρεκακία, a compound affection of Joy and Hate, when we rejoyce at other mens mischief, and are grieved at their prosperity

Wider modern rendering: malicious joy, a compound of joy and hatred, when we rejoice in other people’s misfortunes and grieve at their prosperity

Wider alignment scope: equal-scope explanatory construction

Wider word and construction: The Greek word names malicious delight; the remaining original words supply the compound classification and converse grief.

Passages and reading routes

Source order follows the supplied reading sequence. A = article Places to Read; D = further article discussion; L = lexical attestation; C = context; X = separately cited alignment. These are routes, not occurrence counts. Page labels refer to the supplied source edition; local qualifications remain in the linked record.

K = component route to an existing explanation; it does not add an attestation count.
